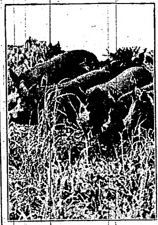
When there is no apparent cause for failure of swine to mate, experts of the United States Department of Agriculture frequently have observed a lazy or sluggish temperament. These hogs generally are of the type known as "hot-bloods." They are fat and show an unwillingness to exercise. The tendency is more common in mature hogs and increases with age, but is frequently found in young stock. Careless and unwise inbreeding practices tend to produce hogs of this type, but inbreeding does not necessarily bring about the condition.



Pigs on Oat and Pea Forage.

When the lack of sexual vigor is seen in only an occasional animal it may be possible to recognize the fault in blood lines or type. But when failure to mate occurs frequently and when the type is right, the indications are that the system of management is fundamentally wrong.

Upon the appearance of this condition an effort should be made to correct it by a restriction or modification of the diet and an abundance of exercise. The ration must have the fat-producing feeds largely reduced and protein feeds plentifully supplied. Pastures should be provided where possible, but when these are not available then the ration should consist of alfalfa meal, alfalfa, soybean or clover hay to supply protein and vitamines, high-grade tankage, fish meal, linseed meal, or a good grade of white middlings and whole oats—with but small amounts of corn or ground barley, together with a good mineral mixture. In addition an abundance of daily exercise must be given. This will probably have to be forced by driving the boar or sow about the paddocks or pastures daily until the animal is tired.

By maintaining the digestive functions in a proper manner, by causing abundant exercise and by supplying proper nourishment, there will be brought about a proper elimination of the body wastes and a rebuilding of the tissues. This should cause the reproductive organs to function properly and bring about a toning up of the system in such manner that breeding operations will be successfully conducted.

Swine breeders must be alert to the necessity for ruggedness in herd boars in addition to other qualifications. Breeders must refrain also from too great a degree of fineness and smoothness in the selection of their breeding animals or loss of breeding power will ultimately develop in their herds.

FAMOUS AUTO RACER KILLED

"Si" Cobb, famous as a dirt track auto racer, and who performed in his big red car at the Pennington County Fair race course early this fall, was killed at Omaha a few days ago when one of the wheels of his machine broke during a race. He died from injuries about an hour after the accident. Both Mr. and Mrs. Cobb visited here at the home of Mrs. Cobb's uncle, Lars Loberg, this fall while they were taking in the program at the fair track. Two pictures of Mr. Cobb which were shown in the Minneapolis Tribune after his death, were from snapshots taken here by Miss Ragna Loberg, cousin of Mrs. Cobb.

LYCEUM COURSE TO START SOON

Dates have been assigned for the three number lyceum course which was contracted for last spring by members of the Athletic Association and others. The Lilly Williams Company with a varied program, will appear Oct. 5th. This is an exceptionally fine number. On Nov. 23, the All Sisters Quartette will present a program of vocal and instrumental music that is considered among the best lyceum numbers shown anywhere. The last number is Rena Gilman famed as a play reader and impersonator.

Larson--Person

Last evening occered the marriage of Miss Dora Larson, daughter of Mr. Emil Larson, to Mr. Carl Person, son of Mr. and Mrs. Nels Person of this village. The ceremony was performed by Rev. A. F. Nelson at the Swedish Lutheran parsonage. Misses Hattie Larson and Hulda Person, sisters of the bride and groom respectively, acted as bridesmaids, while Henry Person and Henry Melin were groomsmen. The young couple left last evening for a short trip after which they will return here. Both Mr. and Mrs. Person have a large circle of friends in this village and vicinity who join in extending felicitations.

Visit Here

Rev. and Mrs M. Gjerde and family, accompanied by Mrs. Gjerde's father, Martin Simonson, were here Thursday and Friday for a visit with friends while enrouts from Thief River to Pelican Rapids where Rev. Gjerde has accepted the pastorate of a Lutheran church.

Rev. Gjerde and family left Friday morning by auto, while Mr. Simonson remained to visit friends, and went down later by train.

Motor Arrives

The long looked for motor for the water system at the creamery arrived yesterday and is now installed. Unless something unforseen occurs to further delay matters, it is expected the machinery will be moved in last of this week so that the creamery will be in operation at the new stand first of next week.

WRITER AND LECTURER DEAD

Per O. Stromme, Norwegian writer, lecturer, traveler and journalist, died Thursday last week at Madison, Wis., after an illness exending for over a year. Mr. Stormme was for many years a leading figure on Norwegian papers in Minnesota and North Dakota, especially the Normanden at Grand Forks. He has lectured here and was well known to a number of residents of this village.

Community Club Meeting

The St. Hilaire Community Club meetings which were discontiued during the summer month, will be started again with a meeting at the school house to be held Friday evening, Sept. 30. A good program has been arranged, and an out of town speaker will possibly be present. A good attendance is desired at this meeting so those who have attended before should plan to bring a friend or two.

Harvest Home Dinner

The annual Harvest Home dinner given by the M. E. Ladies' Aid will be held in the rooms over Nelson's store Friday this week. A chicken dinner with all trimmings will be served at a price of 25 and 35 cents. Everybody welcome.

Basketball Friday

Opening of the basketball season will occur Friday night when the high school Tigers will take on the city team. If the latter should fail to show up thru realization of the hopeless task they are undertaking, it is planned to take on a pickup team. At any rate there will be a game, and it's going to free.

FARMER CO-OP. FIRM PROSPERS

The Central Co-operative Commission, recently organized by Minnesota farmers to handle their stock at So. St. Paul market, handled twice the amount of stock the past four weeks as did their nearest competitor, and did it at 45 per cent less than current charges. The co-operative agency charges 25 per cent beow prevailing rates, and has been able to put 20 per cent of its earnings into a reserve fund.

The farmer owned company handled 31,584 head of livestock while its closest rival handled 15,327. One of the important services rendered is transferring stockers and feeders direct from farmer to farmer at minimum cost. In four weeks the firm shipped 63 carloads of stockers and feeders.

Auctions

Three auctions are slated to take place next week. On Tuesday a sale will be held at the C. Arneson place east of Hazel, on Wednesday C. W. Johnson will have a sale near Wylie, and on Friday occurs the sale at Mrs. Miller's place west of town.

Wed At Minneapolis

Local friends received announcement this week of the marriage of Mrs. Anna Martz to Mr. Lyman Haynes of Minneapolis which event took place in that city a short time ago. Mrs. Haynes had been a resident of this village for many years up to her departure for Minneapoils a month ago, and she has a large circle of friends here who join in extending hearty good wishes to herself and her husband.

As to Cerebral Structure.

So far as cerebral structure goes, it is clear that men differ less from the chimpanzee and orang, than these do even from the monkeys, and that the difference between the brain of the chimpanzee and of man is almost insignificant, when compared with that between the chimpanzee brain and that of a lemur.—J. CLINIC WILL BE HELD HERE SOON

The Pennington County Public Health Ass'n. has arranged for a nutritonal clinic to be held here on Sept. 30, and in Thief River on Oct. 1. These clinics do for older children what the Baby clinic did for babys in detecting general run down condition which can be overcome by judicious feeding, sleep and exercise, provided of course, actual defects such as diseased tonsils, etc., are corrected.

The clinic will be conducted by members of the Northwestern Pediatric Society and is primarily for children from 5 to 16 years of age who are underweight. It will be necessary to have children weighed and measured a few days before the clinic. Those ten per cent or more underweight will be selected for examination. The county nurse will take care of this feature of the clinic. Mothers should be on hand when their children are examined in order to get answers to any questions that may arise in her own mind. The real value of the clinic is lost unless the mothers are present.

MACHINERY SALES DROP

Sales of farm machinery have dropped from 50 to 95 per cent and improvements on farms and farm homes have decreased in the same proportion in Minnesoata, asserts the Farm Bureau which has made a statewide investigation.

While in many counties farmers are exchanging both machinery and labor, and repairing every equipment that can again be put into service, the fact remains that decrease in purchase of machinery and curtailment of improvement of buildings reflects the agricultural progress in the state. Unless deflation that has brought farm products to pre-war prices operates as effectively on supplies the farmer must buy, he will be forced by economic pressure to produce less, which eventually will mean much higher prices for the consumer.

Thompson--Avelson

Mr. Adolph Avelson and Miss Myrtle Thompson, well known local young people, were united in marriage by Rev. Larson at Thief River Falls last Thursday. They left immediately for Arneson near Lake of the Woods east of Warroad where they will reside on the groom's homestead during the winter. Both contracting parties are well and favorably known, and both have a large number of friends who join in wishing them a long and happy married life.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE

Notice is hereby given that default has been made in the conditions of that mortgage duly executed and delivered by John Heaven, a single man, mortgagor, to Merchants State Bank of Red Lake Falls, a corporation, mortgagee, bearing date the 22nd day of June, 1915, with power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of the County of Pennington, State of Minnesota, on August 26th. 1915 at 8:30 A. M., in book 3 of Mortgages on page 514, which said mortgage together with the debt secured thereby was duly assigned by said Merchants State Bank of Red Lake Falls, mortgagee, to North western Trust Company, as Trustee under the Last Will and Testament of Stephen Gardner, Deceased, by written assignment dated September 2nd 1915, and recorded in the office of said Register of Deeds on September 9th. 1915, at 1:00 P. M., in book 8 of Mortgages on page 633; which default has continued to the date of this notice by the failure and neglect of said mortgagor to make payment of the sum of One Thousand fifty-five dollars ($1055.00) principal and interest by said mortgage secured, which by its terms became due and payable on June 1st. 1920. And whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sum of $1055.00 with interest thereon at 5½% per annum since June 1st. 1920, and the further sum of $149.92 taxes paid by the undersigned on July 27th. 1921, with interest thereon at 6% per annum since July 27th 1921, being a total due at date of this notice of One thousand five hundred seventy-nine dollars seventy-five cents $(1,579.-75); and whereas the power of sale has become operative and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise has been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof. Now therefore notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, to-wit: The Northeast quarter (NE¼) of Section Twenty-one (21) in Township One hundred fifty-two (152) North of Range forty-one (41) West. of the 5th Principal Meridian for Minnesota, in Pennington County, State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Pennington County at the front door of the Courthouse in the City of Thief River Falls in said county and state on the 17th day of October, 1921, at 10:00 o'clock in the forenoon of that date, at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash to pay said debt of $1,579.75 and interest from date of this notice, and the taxes paid and to be paid if any on said premises, and $75.00 attorney's fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from date of sale as provided by law.

CAMPAIGN FOR BETTER SIRES

Department of Agriculture Is Aiding Movement by Issuing Number of Publications.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

In response to many requests for information to be used in starting better-sires movements in various localities, the bureau of animal industry, United States Department of Agriculture, has prepared a list of available publications and other material in the department. It has also furnished data useful to persons interested in legislation for restricting the use of mongrel sires.

Except when the open range is involved, however, or there is need to control inferior sires from running at large, specialists of the bureau prefer a continuance of educational work to legislation. They place emphasis on the fact that the work, although involving certain records and blanks, is strictly educational. To aid in conducting educational campaigns, the department has issued a number of circulars, posters and newspaper articles, as well as much mimeographed material. A booklet entitled "Better Sires—Better Stock," explaining the movement, can be obtained by addressing the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C. Other material on this subject is:

A Purebred Sire.

Yearbook Separate 816, Harnessing Heredity to Improve the Nation's Live Stock.

Department Bulletin 905, Principles of Live Stock Breeding (semiscientific). Price, 15 cents.

Farmers' Bulletin 1167, Essentials of Animal Breeding.

Enrollment Blank for Better Sires—Better Stock Crusade (on which live stock owners agree to use good purebred sires).

Specific Facts and Figures on Benefits Following Use of Better Sires.

County Live Stock Survey Blank.

Poster, Which Way Is Your Live Stock Going?

Poster, Purebred Sires and Herd Improvement.

Several sets of 72 lantern slides each have also been prepared by the department and a motion picture is now in the making.

MILK HELPS YOUNG ANIMALS

Skim Milk and Other Creamery By-Products Are Useful Feeds for Pigs and Calves.

While whole milk is nature's balanced food and is valuable for young animals, skim milk and other creamery by-products, such as buttermilk and whey, are also useful feeds, say specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture. Skim milk is fed to young pigs in the proportion of about three pounds to one of concentrates, such as cornmeal or shorts. Buttermilk, which has not been diluted too much with water, has nearly the same feeding value as skim milk. It is a better food for swine than for calves because it is apt to cause digestive disturbances when fed to the latter, unless considerable care is used. Whey is used almost exclusively in feeding swine. It is about two-thirds as valuable as skim milk as a food. Accordingly from ten to twelve pounds of whey are equivalent to one pound of grain. Sweet skim milk, when supplemented with other feed such as corn meal or wheat shorts, is very good for young calves. If beef calves are to be fed skim milk, they should be fed in practically the same manner as dairy calves.

HIGHER PRICES FOR HORSES

Farmers Are Advised to Breed More Heavy Draft Animals Wanted for City Hauling.

Heavy draft horses are in greater demand and commanding higher prices than at any time in the last 20 years, according to the proprietor of a Boston trucking concern which maintains 100 horses and 28 auto trucks. In a letter received at University farm he says: "For the short haul the horse has no competitor. We buy at any time and have paid as high as $600 each, but are not getting as good horses as we would like to use. We believe the peak stage of motortruck sales and use has been reached. IN SUMMER SILKS

Fabric Likely to Show Patterned and Brocaded Styles.

Much of the Material Is Woven in America, But French Ideas Influence Styles.

Most of the silks you and I wear in summer time, observes a fashion writer, are woven right here in America—and indeed no French looms produce more beautiful fabrics than some of the American silks. But French silk patterns influence world styles to a great extent and because the new silks in Paris are mostly patterned silks, the summer silks of America this year are likely to show patterned or brocaded designs. If there is not a decided pattern, the silk weave is likely to give a contrast of light and shade that makes a sort of pattern of its own.

Paris always gives fanciful names to new fabrics and some of the names—not all—get to this country. Some do not because they are too hard to pronounce. Anybody can say crepe de chine and peau de sole now, and some tongues can even curl around drap de soile and faille—which is quite different in sound from the way it looks. But how about Eblouissante," a new glace silk just now the rage in Paris, or "Damas Mauresque," a handsome brocade in metal and colored threads? We shall all be getting these names off as glibly as peau de cygne, perhaps, by another season.

Isis crepes have Egyptian and Persian pattern designs in color on a soft, neutral crepe ground, and almost all the new Paris crepes and chiffons have Syrian, Persian or Egyptian patterns. Sometimes the pattern is so closely spaced as to give a blurred, shadowy effect. Sometimes the design is quite distinct, as for instance black chiffon printed in small bright-colored patterns.

Shall we be wearing foulards next August? Most women want to know that. There are a few foulards among the new Paris silks and they have geometric patterns. One navy blue foulard has irregular checks in white and a zigzag over-line in scarlet. Shantungs will be very smart and many of them have big, splashing patterns in color the very brightest colors being blended together. Glace taffetas are shown in profusion for afternoon and evening wear. Take it all in all, however, the smartest spring silks are the crepes and chiffons with Syrian or Persian patterns on a neutral or black ground.

AN OUTFIT FOR SPRING WEAR

Winsome among spring creations is a black rough, hand braided celophane sailor with a gardenia, accompanied by an eight-skin Russian sable. Ropes of pearl complete the outfit.

SEEN AT THE FASHION SHOW

Smart walking toque of hemp straw in gray and blue bands, trimmed with glycerined ostrich. This was one of the popular models displayed at the recent fashion show held in New York.

THE CHOKER-COLLAR IS BACK

Modes of This New Accessory Are Many and Each of Them Is Very Becoming.

If you do not already have a high collar in your winter wardrobe you had better put one there, for Paris and America are being swept off their feet by the vogue for the "choker-collar." To be sure, there are no whalebones to make it stiff and uncomfortable, but the tightness and the height are there just the same.

The modes of this new collar are many, and each of them is very becoming. There are mannish collars with perky bow ties, high fur collars in "soup-bowl" effect, collars topped with monkey fur, and many, many others.

One fashionable designer achieves a very smart effect by using a wide black velvet ribbon above a white satin afternoon frock. The ribbon is caught at the back of the neck by a single rose and then allowed to fall almost to the hem of the frock.

Spring Fashions.

Plaited skirts are a feature of many youthful spring suits—not straight plaited, but group or cluster plaited. Princess lines for dresses still persist and are noted on dresses for both street and house wear. The use of two fabrics in combination for dresses and for suits is now quite a definite feature of spring fashions. Even lingerie frocks are affected by this style trend.

Milady's Choice of Colors

No One Shade More Artistic Than Another; Combinations the Secret of Beauty.

Color has a tendency to reflect its complement. No one color is more artistic than another, but it is in the combination of colors that beauty lies. The woman who dresses becomingly avoids strong contrasts. She also chooses the shades that bring out the best factors of her make-up and subdue those which are not good. The fat woman who wishes to conceal unattractive lines resorts to neutral hues.

The girl with golden hair, fair skin and blue eyes wears becomingly black with touches of blue or cerise, dark shades of brown, white, nearly all shades of blue, light and dark green, dark red, pearl and dove gray, cream, and pale pink or old rose.

The auburn-haired girl is charming in transparent materials of black. Cream and ivory and rich dark shades of brown accentuate her glorious beauty. To her, too, is given to wear the peacock blues as well as navy blue, grays, and the softer shades. If her skin is white and of good color, she may wear green. Pearl and dove gray also are becoming.

Even the sallow type of girl with brown or black hair and gray eyes presents real charm if she chooses colors wisely. She should select carefully from among the dark, dull shades, using touches of bright color, such as rose or flame.

The sandy-haired girl with blue or brown eyes may wear somewhat the same shades as the girl with auburn hair, but in choosing browns she should keep to the deep, dark shades. Sallow blondes may wear cream white, soft gray with dark reds, and yellows with creamy lace and rich tones of gray combined with burnt orange or ecru.

FASHION NOTES OF INTEREST

The one-piece costume will lead for spring.

Lingerie dresses are reported stronger than for years.

Hair lace is being used for many dress hats this season.

A number of effective evening gowns are made entirely of wide ribbon this season.

Ginghams are also much worn in the South, even bathing suits being made of gingham.

Chocolate is a shade emphasized by reports from the South, even sweaters being popular in this shade.

Yellow is one of the most popular colors for lingerie, a note the Easter bride will do well to remember.

French figured sateens and English prints are among the summer dress materials noted at Southern resorts.

Silk sweater dresses and sweater dresses of wool and silk or wool combined are a development of considerable importance.

The directoire, with its raised waistline, is the newest silhouette offered, although the wide skirt, with tightly fitted bodice, has gained in favor, particularly for the younger element.

THE KITCHEN CABINET

(© 1921, Western Newspaper Union.)

A man's true greatness lies in the consciousness of an honest purpose in life, founded on a just estimate of himself and everything else, on frequent self-examination, and a steady obedience to the rule which he knows to be right, without troubling himself about what others may think or say or whether they do, or do not do, that which he thinks and says and does.—George Long.

SOME GOOD MAIN DISHES.

A good homely dish which is sufficiently satisfying for the hard-working head of a family is:

Dumplings and Steak.—Cook the steak first on one side, then on the other in a smoking hot, lightly greased frying pan. Season well and cover with boiling water. Drop on dumplings made by using one cupful of flour, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one-third of a cupful of sweet milk, one-third of a teaspoonful of salt and one tablespoonful of fat. Drop by spoonfuls on the steak and cover tightly and steam for twenty minutes.

Tuna Fish Loaf.—Take a pound can of tuna fish, two whole eggs or whites of four, one-half cupful of water, one-fourth teaspoonful of celery salt, one cupful of stale bread crumbs, one teaspoonful of baking powder, one teaspoonful of salt, the juice of half a lemon and a speck of cayenne. Mix well, season to taste. Pack in a bread tin and brown. Turn out on a serving platter and pour parsley sauce over the loaf.

Parsley Sauce.—Wash and cover with boiling water one bunch of parsley to which a pinch of salt and soda has been added. Cook ten minutes, strain and add to a cupful of thick white sauce and stir in one tablespoonful of fresh minced parsley. Garnish with sprigs of fresh parsley.

Mock Lobster Chowder.—Take one cupful of flaked and soaked codfish, six medium-sized potatoes, three onions, two cupfuls of stewed tomato, one tablespoonful of salt, one-eighth of a teaspoonful of pepper, two tablespoonfuls of butter, one-half dozen milk crackers, two cupfuls of milk, one-half teaspoonful of soda. Put freshened codfish, sliced potatoes and onions into a kettle, cover with boiling water and cook until soft. Add the tomato, seasoning, heat well, add the soda to the milk and add the crackers. Bring to the boiling point and serve.

Ox-Tail Stew.—Cut one and one-half pounds of ox-tail into small pieces, cover with water, add salt and cook two hours. Then add two cupfuls of minced carrots, one cupful of minced onions, more seasoning, if needed, and cook one more hour. The last half hour before serving add one pint of strained tomato. If it seems too thin add a little flour and cook until smooth.

When men and women are rightly occupied, their amusement grows out of their work as the color petals out of a fruitful flower.—John Ruskin.

DISHES FROM JAMAICA.

Many of the wonderful fruits of the tropics which have no keeping qualities can never be tasted unless one is privileged to visit the zone, as the flavor is lost or entirely spoiled by the ocean travel. Some of the dishes common in that clime are possible to produce and are well worth trying.

Coconut Pudding.—Grate one coconut and beat eight eggs, reserving three whites for a meringue. Beat in one cupful of sugar and the eggs and coconut, put into a buttered baking dish and bake until nearly done, then cover with the meringue prepared from the three whites and three tablespoonfuls of powdered sugar, spread over the pudding and brown. Serve at once. This amount will serve eight.

Coconut and Tapioca Pudding.—Take one-half cupful of tapioca, one pint of milk, two eggs, one-quarter of a pound of granulated sugar (one-half cupful), one teaspoonful of butter, three heaping tablespoonfuls of grated coconut. Mix the tapioca and coconut, add the milk, beat the yolks of two eggs with the sugar and mix with the rest; stir in the butter and bake in a well-buttered baking dish set in a dish of water. When nearly done beat the two whites with two tablespoonfuls of powdered sugar; spread over the top of the pudding and bake a light brown. Serve hot or cold.

Coconut Biscuits.—Grate one coconut fine. Beat the whites of two eggs until stiff; mix in gradually one cupful of granulated sugar and by degrees the grated coconut, beating all the while. With the hands lightly floured, roll this mixture into little balls the size of a walnut and bake them on a greased baking sheet. Bake at first in a moderate oven then increase the heat to brown and harden at the bottom or they will crumble when handled.

Fried Noodles.—Cook noodles in boiling water for fifteen minutes. Drain, pour on cold water and cook in a little hot fat in a frying pan until well seasoned.

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale

OTHER ADVENTURES.

The boy and the girl who were going in search of fine adventures met a great many boys and girls at one time.

"Who are you? All of you?" asked the boy.

"And who are you?" asked the others.

"I'm an adventurer," said the boy.

"And I'm his companion," said the girl. "We're both on our way to the House of Secrets."

"We thought of going there ourselves," said the others. "We're off for adventures."

"Let's all go together," said the boy.

"Let's," they all agreed.

"Well, I know which of these crossroads to take," said the boy, "for I was shown which was the short cut."

"We tried that road and it led nowhere at all," said the others.

"That is," added one, "there are ravines and steep banks where the dirt and you will fall down together if you're not careful. And even if you're careful it will do the same. And there is a creek a little distance below where many trees have fallen, and you have to climb over the great trunks of the trees if you want to go on."

"This other road is much smoother," said the girl. "It looks as if more people had traveled upon it."

"Don't you remember," said the boy, "how we came to the crossroads before and how we chose the smoother of the two roads rather than the bumpy one?"

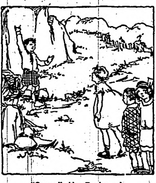
"Then we met the witch and she told us that the bumpy one was the one we should have taken. We took the smooth one and it didn't lead anywhere at all. She called it the Road Commonplace.

"She told us we couldn't always dodge the bumps if we wanted to find the House of Secrets. She seemed to think bumps were really quite important."

"I think," said the girl, "that they puzzle us by doing the same thing here and that we must do the opposite of what they think we will do.

"Now they think we will take the bad road because before we should have done that. We'll take the good one, fool them and be right!"

"But," said the boy, "Joy told me that this other one was right. He said it was a short cut to the House of Secrets."



"Come," He Beckoned.

"Yes," said one of the other boys, "it is doubtless a short cut as far as miles are concerned, but it will take you twice as long to get there that way. It's too hard."

"I'll try it," said the boy. "Come," he beckoned to the girl.

But she didn't care to go, because she thought perhaps she was being fooled and also that the boy was bossing her which was worse.

Then one of the others said, "Here, I'll lead the way. I've always been a good one for leading. Here, boys and girls. Come and do as I say. Follow me."

"I think some of you should follow me," said the girl. "I want to be a leader, and it is high time I started in. I want to be of more importance than the boy. He mustn't lead in everything."

"You're going back on your companion," said the boy.

"I will lead," said one.

"I will," said another.

"No, I will," said a third.

"Let me lead," said the fourth.

They began quarreling and fighting about who should be the leader, and they did not notice it was growing dark.

Neither did they remember that everyone couldn't be a leader. The others didn't really want to do anything difficult, and the girl really knew that the boy was right in this.

But when they all quarreled there was only great confusion, and though it all came right in the end, it took a longer time to come right than it should have done.

For quarreling and jealousy for leadership are stumbling blocks along the way to the House of Secrets.

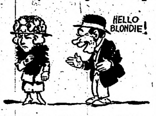
HAPPENINGS in the BIG CITIES

A New Way of Impersonating an Officer



HELLO BLONDIE!

CHICAGO.—William E. Boyington, a contractor, has confessed to Chief Fitzmorris that he had attempted to steal the reputation of a man who had befriended him—Dr. Herman N. Bundesen, health department epidemiologist. Chief Fitzmorris and Lieut. John Naughton had spent two days hunting for the man who impersonated the physician and annoyed Mrs. Florence De Ellis of 7531 Dorchester avenue at midnight.

"I'm the man you want, chief," Boyington said when policemen led him into the chief's office. "Doctor Bundesen was a good friend to me—gave me medical attention and forgot to send me a bill for it. I don't know what made me do it. I was drunk at the time."

Boyington, who lives at 419 East Seventy-sixth street, has been engaged for a week in building an addition to Doctor Bundesen's home at 7414 Oglesby avenue. In this way he learned the physician's habits and was able to palm himself off as the doctor.

Mrs. De Ellis has a husband and ten-year-old daughter. Doctor Bundesen has five children. Boyington is also married.

"What shall we do?" asked Chief Fitzmorris of Doctor Bundesen after Mrs. De Ellis had identified Boyington. "If you say the word I'll hand him over to the grand jury tomorrow."

"If he will sign a statement that he impersonated me I'll drop the matter," Doctor Bundesen said.

Boyington sobbed out his willingness to "do anything so I can go home."

"I was out celebrating the birth of a baby girl to my sister," his written confession says. "I visited saloons near Sixty-third street and Cottage Grove avenue and became intoxicated.

"I met Mrs. De Ellis at Seventy-fifth street and Cottage Grove avenue. I walked up to her and said, 'Hello, blondie.' I told her I was Doctor Bundesen. She got on an east-bound car and I got on after her. I told her to go to 7414 Oglesby avenue (Doctor Bundesen's home) so I could get my auto and give her a ride. She got off at Dorchester avenue. I alighted after her and she ran away."

Certainly; "All the World Loves a Lover"

NEW YORK.—Here's a romance which began exactly two years ago on the banks of the Rhine. Former First Lieut. James Frank Smith of the Second division, A. E. F., residing in Chicago, is the bridegroom, and the girl who remained hopeful for two years was Miss Erna Rosa Forstmayer. She is the first German girl to come to America to be married to an American citizen since the war. They were married at St. Francis of Assisi church by special dispensation.

When Jimmy Smith, with his Sixth regiment of marines, left the banks of the Rhine for the states in July, 1919, Erna slipped a small gold mesh bracelet on his left wrist.

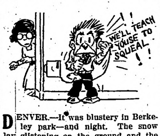
"If you love me, James, this bracelet will never become loose from your wrist. Good-by and good luck," she said.

After the wedding ceremony Lieutenant Smith held out his left wrist to his bride and she solemnly unclasped the bracelet and they kissed.

Smith went over to France and later to the bridgeheads of the Rhine in Germany as a sergeant. He was decorated with the French fouragere and given a single silver bar on his shoulder. He was soon made a fleet supply officer and had charge of one of the vessels on the Rhine. In this work he met Miss Forstmayer. It was a case of love at first sight for them both. Because of the order against fraternizing with German girls Smith was forbidden to marry her and take her back to the States.

Smith implored his commanding officer, Maj. Gen. Le Jeune, to intercede with the State department. Le Jeune talked it over with Secretary Bainbridge Colby. Colby finally acceded to the request to permit Smith's sweetheart to leave Germany, even though we were technically "at war with Germany."

Eric Escapes the Edgewater Dirty Devils



WE'LL TEACH YOUSE TO SQUEAL!!

DENVER.—It was blustery in Berkeley park—and night. The snow lay glistening on the ground and the wind moaned in the vacant tree branches dismally. The telephone rang in Eric Peabody's home.

"Ullo," said Eric, turning a ghastly white, because he knew what was coming, and he guessed right.

"This is the Edgewater Dirty Devils club talkin'," said a sinister voice over the wire, "and we're awaiting for you down by the lake."

"I ain't coming down," Eric answered promptly.

"Then if youse ain't coming down," said the sinister voice, "we are coming up—youse a snitcher—and the Edgewater Dirty Devils don't stand for nothing like that; you just wait there, Eric, an' we'll be right up—just as fast as we can come, and we'll bring them saps and clubs and brass knucks, too."

Eric hung up the receiver. "I'm going up in the attic, ma," he announced. Eric went up, looking for the darkest corner.

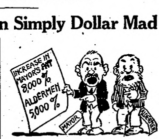
But Mrs. Ladd had seen the Edgewater Dirty Devils in action when they met the Berkeley Dogs last summer. She got busy. Fifteen minutes later the door bell rang. And just then Officer Coombs and another cop arrived. The Edgewater Dirty Devils ran for it, but Coombs caught Marine.

"What did you fellows intend to do?" asked Judge Bray.

"I'm de secretary of the Edgewater Dirty Devils," said Marine, gritting his teeth.

"Then have the club's treasurer take care of your fine; ten cents and costs," said the court.

Mayor and Aldermen Simply Dollar Mad



INCREASE IN MAYOR'S PAY 8,000% ALDERMEN 5,000%
MAYOR ALDERMEN

HOOPESTON, ILL. — Confronting post-war conditions and the inevitable economic stress of world-wide readjustment. Hoopeston is debating vehemently the question: "Shall salaries of city servants be increased? The citizens are defending the negative. The city servants are unanimously yessing.

The mayor seeks an increase of 8,000 per cent and the aldermen 5,000 per cent. The mayor now receives 50 cents a year and the aldermen 25 cents a year. They are paid by the year and have no expense accounts. The mayor demands $8 a week and the aldermen $5.

Hoopeston is in the northeast corner of Vermilion county, about 150 miles south of Chicago, and has a population of 5,000, public library, telephones, banks, a grain elevator, paved streets, sewers, and two newspapers.

A resolution embodying the demands was introduced at the last meeting of the city council by Alderman Thomas Haas and adopted without a dissenting vote. Two former mayors, I. E. Merritt and William Moore, oppose the demands.

"For forty years," declares Mr. Moore, "Hoopeston's mayors have been glad to serve the people for 50 cents a year. This resolution is indicative of the shocking state of affairs that now obtains in this country. It would be a reckless waste of money to accede to the demands. These men are dollar mad."

Hoopeston has never had a saloon. It claims more church-going people than any metropolis of its size in the world. It now has $50,000 in the city treasury.

Never Thought of That

By R. RAY BAKER

(©, 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Agatha Woods put down the "Weekly Gazette," and when she resumed her knitting her fingers trembled. Harriet, her sharp-eyed sister, gaunt and sunburned from working in the fields with the men, regarded her from drooping lids.

"Any particular news, Aggie?" she asked, bending over to mend a basket handle. "I ain't had time to read the paper this week."

Agatha shook her head. "Nothing very much," she returned slowly, then she added swiftly as if afraid her natural reticence would withhold it, "Nathan Storm's home again."

Harriet picked up her mended basket and a painful blush stained her homely face. "I know it—the men told me. I'm going now. We want to get the hay in before it rains."

"What can I do?" called Agatha from the doorstep.

"Have supper ready when the storm breaks," was Harriet's reply.

"That's so easy," sighed Agatha. "Harriet always gives me the easy load. I wonder if she sent Nathan away because her duty was to stay by me?"

She busied herself about the evening meal while distant thunder growled along the horizon. She made a huge strawberry shortcake, prepared ice cold tea, cut slices of delicious pink ham, baked biscuits and brought out a great plate of ginger cookies. When the table was ready with its snowy cloth and lavender sprigged china she sat down and resumed her knitting, and with knitting came thoughts of Nathan Storm.

He and Harriet had loved, and because young Agatha had flirted with Nathan, Harriet had felt it her duty to give up Nathan to her little sister. But Nathan refused to be given up, nor did he want any one but Harriet herself, then a beautiful, brown, Hebe-like young woman. Harriet was firm in duty to Agatha, stern in upholding her trust to her dead parents, and so Nathan went away.

"He Did Bring Something Back!"

Twenty years had passed away. Agatha was a delicate woman, working about the house in happy contentment; Harriet took the man's part and managed the farm. They were now well-to-do and had never missed the happiness that marriage brings in its wake.

"I must make them happy this time," Agatha mused, and a worried frown came over her placid face. "Harriet's got to marry him now! I will miss her, though—it will be lonesome enough in the old place—maybe they would like to live here and I could go to the old ladies' home—Amanda Petty is there—and she would be real good company for me."

The storm broke just as the last load of hay rolled into the great barn like a triumphal chariot, and Agatha flew to put the last touches to the evening meal. Soon the hay-makers would come in, hot and tired, to dash themselves with cool water in the shed room, dry themselves on the fresh towels and then eat like hungry wolves. This supper was to celebrate the last of the hay making.

Harriet's eyebrows went up at sight of the daintily spread table, but as the workers were all neighbors and friends she was glad that Agatha had made a little feast of it. All the time she was eating one thought was droning through Harriet's busy brain. "Next hay making time I'll be in the old ladies' home and Nathan will be managing the farm while Agatha waits for him—I'll miss not having her waiting for me—she won't miss me, she'll have Nathan."

The two sisters did not eat much—they talked about the hay and about the storm, which was very severe. Harriet got up and lighted the swinging lamp over the table and pulled down the window shades. "I expect Nathan will put in electric lights," she thought as she sat down again. One of the men was speaking and a familiar name caught her attention.

"Nathan Storm's home again," he informed them.

"Yes?" said Agatha politely, and Harriet nodded in her brisk way.

"Is he going to stay home now?" asked Harriet.

"I guess so—he's going to work at the shipyard. Says he'll settle down as soon as he can find a house to live in. Nathan asked after you, folks," he nodded at Agatha.

"We went to school with him," said Harriet stiffly.

"Singin' school?" chuckled Adam Smith.

"Little red schoolhouse," choked Agatha, feeling sorry for her sister.

"He didn't seem to make any great success out of life," went on Adam, helping himself to another cookie. "Hasn't much money, but he did bring something back!"

"What was that?" asked Harriet, feeling sorry for Agatha.

"A wife and seven children—keep him hustlin' for their bread and butter—well, good-night, Harriet and Agatha—this has been a grand supper, the best I have ever eaten!"

"Wait till next year—we'll have the biggest harvest supper and ask all the folks around," declared Harriet as she and her sister stood in the doorway and watched the workers wending their way down the road. The storm was over and, the smell of the wet earth was pleasant. Then they turned and faced each other with guilty eyes.

"Nathan here with a wife," breathed Agatha simply.

"And seven children," added Harriet.

"We'll have to see them every day, Harriet."

"Expect they'll overrun the neighborhood, but we haven't got to worry about 'em, except to hand them flowers over the fence," said the stern Harriet with a wonderful smile lighting her strong features.

"And apples," added Agatha, then with a little burst of affection she put her arms around her stronger sister. "I'm so glad, Harry!"

"Glad? When I was worried because I thought you'd be marrying Nathan and going off and leaving me!"

"And I thought the same of you!"

The sisters whom romance had passed by kissed each other joyfully and a great peace and happiness settled down over the old house where two women had just learned that an old flame had burned out, and that the haying storm had blown even the ashes away.

CREATURES OF PAST AGES

Remarkable Prehistoric Monsters That Can Be Identified Only by Their Fossilized Bones.

What geologists term the Oligocene formations contain the fossil bones of a great variety of strange extinct animals. These strata are among the most widespread and most regularly distributed of the Tertiary sedimentary rock formations of the Great plains and cover a vast area in Nebraska and Wyoming.

The lower Oligocene beds, which are believed to be over a million years old, are often called Titanotherium beds because they contain great quantities of the bones of extinct mammals of that name. They were clumsy brutes of elephantine size, according to the United States geological survey, Department of the Interior, having on the front of the skull a pair of great bony protuberances which, although hornlike in form, were probably not sheathed in horn. The head was long and large and of fantastic shape. In its thick, heavy body and short, massive legs the titanothere resembled the modern rhinoceros. It was doubtless a sluggish, stupid beast, for its brain was small in comparison with the size of its body. The brain cavity was only a few inches in diameter and was surrounded by thick bone, as if to withstand shocks in battle. The titanotheres were the most formidable animals of the time, and though, so far as known, there were then no carnivores capable of doing them serious harm, yet they seem to have disappeared suddenly from North America.

The animals of Oligocene time seem to have been abundant as well as varied in kind. Among the characteristic animals of this epoch were primitive forms of rhinoceroses, peccaries, ruminants, camels, insectivores and opossums. Some of the flesh eaters of the preceding Eocene epoch had developed into true carnivores, including many forms of both doglike and catlike animals. The saber-toothed tiger, one of the most formidable enemies of primitive man, first appeared in the Oligocene epoch.

The horses whose history began with the diminutive four-toed Eohippus continued in the Oligocene, in which they were represented by many three-toed forms that were about as large as sheep. Hoglike animals were rather numerous, and although many of them were smaller than the modern swine, some of them were very large. One of these was a formidable beast with curious protuberances on its head, the use of which is not known. Rhinoceroses similar to those now found in Africa and India lived in western America, and other rhinoceros-like animals were abundant.

FARMER SHOULD WEIGH DIFFERENT FINANCIAL PROBLEMS CAREFULLY

Taking the Farm Car Out of the Nonproduction List.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Credit is always a good thing to have, and under certain conditions a very good thing to use, but just now it seems in most cases to be much more desirable to have it than actually to use it. The United States Department of Agriculture warns farmers that the present is a particularly unfavorable time to borrow for any purpose that does not promise naturally to increase the productiveness of the farm enterprise. This applies particularly to long-time loans. Interest rates are at present considerably above normal, and the payment of these rates is in itself a heavy burden to assume.

When to Borrow.

It is furthermore pointed out that while at the beginning or early in the progress of a period of rising prices it is generally highly profitable to borrow for productive purposes, the case is quite different in time of falling prices. When prices go up the value of money goes down, and a debt contracted on a low market can be settled on a high market with money representing correspondingly less labor and smaller quantities of products per dollar. Thus, with rising prices all loans that would be safe on a steady market stand to yield handsome profits. In a period of peak prices, however, or of falling prices, such as farmers are facing now, the shoe is on the other foot. At such a time it is advisable to use great caution in borrowing since there is a probability of having to pay back the loan in dearer dollars than those obtained from the loan.

For those who find that they must borrow at this time in order to avert disaster, or are so situated that by a reasonable amount of additional capital they can naturally increase their earnings, the office of farm management and farm economics offers certain simple rules to be kept in mind.

The first and most important rule is that only as much money be borrowed as can be put to a decidedly productive use. With the rate of interest high and prices falling, only an important use of borrowed capital is likely to make a loan prove profitable or even a safe venture for the borrower. The borrowing of money for the purchase of power machinery, for example, can be justified under present conditions only where farming is done on a considerable scale, and where such machinery can be used a considerable number of days during the year to save time and labor needed elsewhere on the farm.

The second rule to be considered by the farmer concerns the time when the loan shall be repaid. If he borrows money to purchase fertilizer and agrees to repay it before a crop is harvested and sold, he may have difficulty in discharging the debt. If he arranges, however, to pay after the borrowed fertilizer has brought returns, he will be relieved of the possible embarrassment of asking for a renewal of the note and the resultant injury to his credit.

The third consideration is closely related to the second, and has to do with the duration of the loan. Generally speaking, the length of time the debt is allowed to run should be closely related to the productive life of the farm implement or improvement for which the money is employed. If the money is to build a silo that will last ten years, the loan should not run more than ten years, because, if a silo cannot pay for itself in its own lifetime it is plain that it would be folly to borrow to build it. On the other hand, such a loan should run long enough to give the farmer a good chance to meet it when due.

Provision should be made in a long-time loan for the gradual reduction of the principal. This can be done by wording the note so that a part of the principal can be paid on any interest date, or by providing for a definite annual or semi-annual payment covering the interest due and allowing a gradually increasing amount to be paid against the principal. Each of these methods prepares for the payment of the interest as it comes due and automatically disposes of the principal in a stated time.

Total Annual Payments.

On a $1,000 loan to run for 15 years at 5 per cent interest, the farmer could arrange a total annual payment of $100. Of his first $100 payment $50 would settle the interest and leave $50 to be paid against the principal. The next year interest could be charged for only $950, the amount of the reduced principal, and his annual payment would be divided into $47.50 to care for the interest, and $52.50 to be applied on the principal. By this method the debt and its interest are gradually reduced until in the fourteenth year $5.72 would be paid as interest on a principal amounting to only $114.35. The next year the borrower would make a total payment of $21.07, $1 for interest charges and $20.07 to pay off the last of the debt itself.

MAPLE TREES OFFER WEALTH OF SWEETS

Farmers Overlook Opportunities to Obtain Sirup.

Industry Not Confined to Circumscribed Areas in New England and New York—Experience Necessary to Boil Sirup.

Many thousands of American farmers throughout a score of states are overlooking opportunities to secure delicious maple sugar and sirup for home use, as well as for sale, at very little cost. This statement, of interest because of the approach of "sugar weather," is based on data compiled by experts of the United States Department of Agriculture who have made a special study of the maple-sugar industry. While Americans commonly think of this industry as being confined largely to circumscribed areas in New England and New York, there are, as a matter of fact, many potential "sugar bushes" throughout eastern and northeastern United States; in other words, throughout a region extending south to include North Carolina and Tennessee and west to include northern Missouri, Iowa, and Minnesota. There are also a considerable number of maple trees of sugar-yielding species in Washington and Oregon.

While some experience is necessary to boil the sap down to sirup and sugar properly, the process is not complicated and may be learned readily. A United States Department of Agriculture bulletin, "Production of Maple Sirup and Sugar," gives the necessary information, and will be sent free to any person addressing the department at Washington.

A clump of 10 to 15 trees usually will yield enough sirup for family use to make tapping worth while, and in many cases will afford a surplus which can be sold at remunerative price.

LOSSES OF FERTILE EGGS

The following table, compiled by United States Department of Agriculture, shows that the losses of fertile eggs are computed to be nearly twice as great as of infertile eggs:

	Fertile eggs. Per cent.	Infertile eggs. Per cent.
On the farm........	29.0	15.5
At country store....	7.1	4.0
Transportation to packing house.....	6.4	4.7

USING COWPEAS FOR SILAGE

Best Plan in Cutting for Silage to Wait Until Pods First Begin to Turn Yellow.

For silage, cowpeas should be cut when the pods first begin to turn yellow. In many sections alternate rows of cowpeas and corn are put in the silo, but the most common method, perhaps, is one load of cowpeas to two or three loads of corn. This mixture is easily handled, packs quite satisfactorily, keeps well, and makes a superior quality of palatable silage. Although the vines may be put in the silo without cutting, they will pack much closer if run through a silage cutter. Much care should be taken to see that the silage is well distributed and well packed.

FINE HOME FOR AVERAGE FAMILY

Brick and Stucco Affair Has Many Appealing Features.

CONTAINS EIGHT GOOD ROOMS

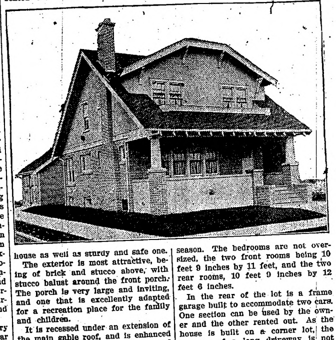
In This House the Builder Has Presented the Owner With a Charming Home as Well as a Sturdy and Safe One.

By WILLIAM A. RADFORD.

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to the subject of building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as Editor, Author and Manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 1827 Prairie avenue, Chicago, Ill., and only enclose two-cent stamp for reply.

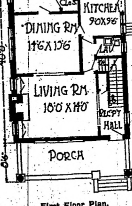
Many people prefer the house to the apartment because they want to get away from the inevitable crowding which is found in buildings of the latter type. Especially is this the case if there are children in the family. The "kiddies" need plenty of sunshine and recreation to develop into healthy men and women and these privileges are not very often found in the large apartment building. The home insures a yard, plenty of breathing space, bedrooms and comfortable rooms. For this purpose the story-and-a-half house is very excellently adapted. Not too large and yet ample for the needs of a family of five or six, it can be constructed at a very reasonable cost. To the average family the item of cost is one of utmost importance.

As the average man builds a home but once in a lifetime, it is a proposition of importance and one that he should study carefully before attempting. While seeking as attractive a home as possible he also wants one that possesses permanency and protection against fire. For these two qualities brick is unexcelled. In the home shown here, the builder has presented the owner with a charming house as well as sturdy and safe one.



The exterior is most attractive, being of brick and stucco above, with stucco balust around the front porch. The porch is very large and inviting, and one that is excellently adapted for a recreation place for the family and children.

It is recessed under an extension of the main gable roof, and is enhanced by attractive stout white pillars and brick approaches. The front door is plain but attractive and opens into a small vestibule or reception hall. This hall leads to the living room on the left and, to the stairs going up. The living room is the main room of the home and very comfortable in size and equipment. On one side is an open brick fireplace, flanked on either side by wall bookcases. Two small windows above these cases supplement the excellent lighting provided by four windows facing the porch. The living room is 18 feet wide and 14 feet long.

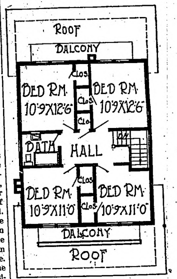


First Floor Plan.

An open doorway leads from this room into the dining room directly to the rear. This room is not quite as large, 14 feet 6 inches by 18 feet 6 inches, but ample for the needs of the family and well lighted by a triple side window. It opens on the right into a small hall which leads to the lavatory and kitchen. The latter room is small and very convenient to the dining room, an important arrangement for the housewife. A door at the far end of the dining room opens into a bedroom very conveniently situated for the cook or maid. It has a large clothes closet.

A pantry and breakfast nook, both connected with the kitchen complete the first-floor plan. Breakfast nooks have come to be considered an important accessory to the modern home because of their convenience in serving lunches and breakfasts. This little nook saves the trouble of serving meals in the larger dining room.

On the upper floor are four bedrooms grouped about a central hall, also the bathroom. All of the bedrooms have windows on two sides, insuring plenty of ventilation and light, two important features in sleeping quarters. The old idea of keeping the air out at night in the bedrooms has lost its hold in most homes. That is why bedrooms in new homes are provided with as much window space as possible. The closets in these bedrooms are exceptionally large. An additional closet off the hall provides a storage place for clothing out of season. The bedrooms are not oversized, the two front rooms being 10 feet 9 inches by 11 feet, and the two rear rooms, 10 feet 9 inches by 12 feet 6 inches.



Second Floor Plan.

In the rear of the lot is a frame garage built to accommodate two cars. One section can be used by the owner and the other rented out. As the house is built on a corner lot, the expense of a long driveway is not necessary. A short concrete driveway is built from the street to the garage.

There are many features about this pretty home that will appeal strongly to the man of family. Now that rents are soaring, many people are planning to build their own homes. This attractive design should prove inspirational for those who are seeking definite ideas on home building.

WEBSTER HELPED OUT CLIENT

Great Lawyer Evidently Possessed Kindness of Heart as Well as a Matchless Brain.

One day a gentleman of Boston, who was sorely disheartened by the failure of a company for whose debts he was responsible, called on Daniel Webster and asked his legal advice. He told Webster of his difficulties, received his advice without charge and left. But at the door he heard Webster calling him. He stopped and turned to see Webster coming toward him with his pocketbook in his hand, saying:

"It seems to me, my dear sir, if I understood rightly, you are entirely without funds. Is that so?"

The client replied that he was indeed penniless, and then, of course, expected a demand for some security for the time as well as the advice he had just engaged Webster to employ in his behalf. Instead of that demand, however, Webster kindly remarked as he handed his client $500:

"Well, there, take that. It's all I have by me now. I wish it were more, and, if you are ever able, you must pay it back to me."

Novel Proposal.

"Have you ever been engaged to be married before?" asked the young man with the blond mustache.

"Oh, yes; eight times, I believe," replied the sweet young thing.

"Well, if your hand is not working just at present, might I have a try for it?"

The Cuckoo Clock From Mother

By DORA MOLLAN

(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Young Mr. Pepper stood in his own dining room, hands in pockets, pipe between his teeth, surveying the whole with an air of perfect contentment. His bachelor dreams were realized. He was married at last to Mabel—this was the first day in their own home and they had been arranging their wedding gifts, with delightful interruptions to explain how wonderful that they two had met and loved—and everything.

"There is only one fly in the ointment," remarked Harry Pepper. "And that is—"

Pretty Mabel hung on his words expectantly. "What is it, dearest?" she asked.

"The—the cuckoo clock, honey."

"The c-u-c-k-o-o c-l-o-c-k," she stammered, "why mother gave me that—I asked her to—I l-o-v-e it, Harry!" Tears brimmed her lovely eyes. Harry kissed her and assured her that he, too, had admired those impertinent reminders of the flight of time, but always at a distance. "I never expected to have one in my own home," he ended.

"But you knew—you knew, Harry, that I adore them—they are cunning."

"I knew it," he admitted, "but I thought after you married me you would not care for such an absurdity. You see, darling, I'm tired at night after a nerve-wracking day at the office, and then to have a silly little bird pop out of ambush and remind me it's time to go to bed—but never mind, I'll get used to it after a while."

"You're an old dear," cried Mabel, but while Harry Pepper smiled patiently his was no martyr spirit.

Came one morning when the neighborhood was rife with tales of burglaries and the Smith's home had escaped ransacking. Came another morning a week later when a frightened maid rushed upstairs and announced that the silver spoons had disappeared from the sideboard and that the cuckoo clock was missing from its accustomed place.

"I cannot feel sorry, darling," said innocent Mr. Pepper to his distracted wife; "but I will call up the police station right away," and he did. He went to the city that morning with a curious feeling of satisfaction. "Some discriminating burglar," he muttered. I'd like to give him a tip about the blue glass vases that Aunt Lucretia donated—well, perhaps Norah will break them some day when she's dusting! I love my home—but some of the wedding presents!"

In the meantime Mabel Pepper had called up her sympathetic mother and related the story of the burglary. "I really miss his cheerful little call," she added.

"Never mind, dear," comforted her mother—"there are just as good fish in the sea as ever were caught, and there are just as charming birdies as ever sang in a cuckoo clock!"

So her mother told Mabel's sad experience to great-aunt Lucretia and to Harry's Uncle Benjamin, who called on her that day. In the meantime the police searched diligently for the midnight marauder.

Mr. Harry Pepper lost his cheery bearing. A troubled look came into his eyes, and he made several grievous mistakes in his work. "Hang the cuckoo clock!" he muttered savagely one night after Mabel had confided to him that it was wretchedly lonesome all day there without him—and that the empty house seemed more cheerful when she could hear the cunning little chirp of the clock.

"Hang the cuckoo clock!" he cried. "I never heard such a fuss made over anything in my life."

Of course Mabel was a sensible young woman, and thought of many other things, and had plenty of amusement to distract her mind, but for the moment her new home was paramount in her thoughts.

One Sunday morning, a couple of weeks after the burglary Mabel came down to breakfast and found the table gay with roses, while her chair was heaped with packages.

"Happy birthday, darling," said her husband, as he slipped a pearl ring on her finger. "I must kiss you how many times—sixteen?"

Mabel told him and then began to open her packages. "Such large ones, dear," she exclaimed; "you must help me."

"A cuckoo clock—from mother. Just like the other one. Isn't it, dear? Do hang it in the old place, Harry—there."

She squealed again when she found that Aunt Lucretia had remembered her birthday with—a cuckoo clock. And once more when Harry's Uncle Benjamin's gift was unwrapped and disclosed another cuckoo clock.

"Three!" laughed Mabel hysterically. "Harry, what shall we do with them?"

"The more the merrier," said Harry gloomily. Then, to the hovering maid servant, "What is it, Norah?"

"Please, Mr. Pepper, I found this on the back doorstep this morning." She gave him a large package wrapped in newspapers.

"What can it be, Harry?" asked his wife cautiously.

"I'm afraid, dearest—yes—another clock!" He held it up and untangled the weights. To one of them was fastened a crumpled envelope. [illegible]

"It's the one that was stolen—[illegible] bel. He must be an honest burglar!"

Harry opened the letter and read the penciled lines:

"Dere mr. Peeper—Hears yore clock, my wife wont have it in the house, she hates kookoo clocks. Its the wifes house and i let her have what she wants. respecfuly—nobudy you no."

The Peppers laughed until they cried, and the laughter and the tears seemed to wash away all the soreness and the bitter feeling caused by the clock. "We shall keep them all," declared Mr. Pepper generously, "to remind me of my selfishness."

"We shall keep only one and ask permission to change the others for something else," declared Mrs. Pepper, "and this being the 'wife's house' you must let me have what I want!"

"It is yours," grinned Mr. Pepper.

"Then—my way is that it is our home—and we must both have what we want—and the best way to do that is to make up our minds to each like what the other likes—" and the rest was buried in the shoulders of her admiring husband.

ERROR COST ARTIST'S LIFE

How A. M. Villard, French Draughtsman, Unintentionally Violated Drastic Law of China.

Of the design of a postal stamp that cost the life of the artist, the Trait d'Union says:

"A. M. Villard, a draughtsman of exceptional ability, was in 1849 employed in the Chinese customs office. He was requested to design new postal stamps to be issued on the sixtieth birthday of the emperor's mother.

"Proud of the distinction thus conferred upon him, Villard did his best to satisfy the Pekin government, but made two fatal mistakes. He used the abbreviation 'Imp. China. Post' instead of spelling out 'Imperial Chinese Post.' As a Chinese public official he was expected to know that the criminal code forbids any abbreviation in a public document under severe penalties.

"Still worse was Villard's other offense. One of his designs was in purple, the use of which color was the exclusive prerogative of the imperial house, and a capital offense for any other person.

"His artistic achievement and good intentions notwithstanding Villard was disgraced, and told that he deserved capital punishment for his unheard-of, even if unintentional, offense against the imperial house.

"In deference to France (Villard was a Frenchman) he was not put to death, but sent on official business to Tibet, a mission that was considered another form of execution. And indeed Villard was never heard of afterward."

To Wearers of Artificial Eyes.

Wearers of artificial eyes usually remove their glass eyes upon retiring in order to rest the orbital tissues during the hours of repose. This practice, absolutely necessary with eyes of the simple shell type (until comparatively recently the only kind used), if a disagreeable suppuration is to be avoided, need not be followed by wearers of artificial eyes of the double shell type, the type most commonly used today—this on the authority of Doctor Coulomb whose paper on this subject was read by Professor de Lapersonne at a recent meeting of the academy of medicine. This feature of double shell eyes is attributable to the fact that, because of their special construction, they permit the tears to flow normally through their natural channels so that the secretions are carried away instead of accumulating in the hollow of the eye socket to cause maceration of the tissues.—From Le Petit Parisien.

Grave of John Howard Payne.

In Georgetown, the oldest part of Washington, is buried the author of "Home, Sweet Home," the song which has been translated into almost every language in the world. John Howard Payne was the American consul in Tunis, where he died about seventy years ago. Many years later W. W. Corcoran, a noted philanthropist, thinking it a shame that a man who loved home so much should be buried thousands of miles away from it, paid the expenses for the bringing of Payne's body home. He was then buried at Oak Hill cemetery, Georgetown, in the plot in front of the chapel. The spot is marked by a pedestal on which is a bust of the poet.

Historic Mountain.

Pisgah, a mountain of the Abarim range, east of the Dead sea, from the top of which Moses viewed the promised land, has been identified also with the modern Naba, a ridge which projects westward from the plateau of Moab, near the northeastern end of the Dead sea. It commands an extensive view of the whole of western Palestine. There are two summits, the higher, Ras Naba; the lower and outermost, Ras Siyagah. The latter commands the whole of the Jordan valley, and is probably identical, says the Jewish Encyclopedia, with the "top of Pisgah which looketh down upon Jeshimon."

Speaking of Softness.

"How beautifully soft it is!" he murmured as he sat on a low stool at her feet, laying his hand on her glorious white arm.

"How less beautiful, but oh, how much softer!" she tenderly replied, laying her jeweled hand on the top of his head.

POULTRY

GUINEAS FAVOR FREE RANGE

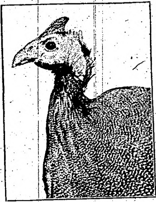
Fowls Can Be Depended Upon to Pick Up Considerable Portion of Their Food.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Most guinea raisers allow their breeding stock free range of the entire farm at all times, and this helps to keep the birds strong and vigorous. During the winter the breeders should have been fed a grain mixture of corn, wheat and oats twice a day, and where no green feed was available, vegetables, such as potatoes, turnips, beets and cabbage. Animal feed is essential to best results and can be supplied by feeding meat scrap or skimmed milk. Given free range, where the supply of natural feed during the winter and early spring are ample, as it usually is in the southern portion of the United States, the guineas can be left to pick up a considerable part of their feed, say poultry specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture. Free access to grit, charcoal, and oyster shell is necessary throughout the breeding season. Avoid having the breeders too fat, but keep them in good, firm flesh.

Like quail and most other wild birds, guinea fowls in their wild state mate in pairs, and this tendency prevails among domesticated guineas, also, provided the males and females are equal in number. As the breeding season approaches, one pair after another separates from the remainder of the flock and ranges off in the fields in search of a suitable nesting place. Once mated this way, the male usually remains with his mate throughout the laying season, standing guard somewhere near the nest while the hen is laying, and ready to warn her of any approaching danger.

However, it is not necessary to mate them in pairs under domestic conditions to secure fertile eggs, and most breeders keep but one male for every three or four females. When mated in this way the hens are more apt to lay near home, and several usually lay in the same nest, thus making it much easier to find the nests and gather the eggs.



Guineas Can Be Confined if Necessary, But They Do Best When Given Free Range.

While guineas can be kept in the best breeding condition upon free range, still they can be confined, if necessary, and satisfactory results obtained. One extensive guinea raiser has confined as many as 45 hens and 15 males in an acre pen throughout the breeding and laying season and been successful. This pen is inclosed with a wire fence five feet high, and the birds are prevented from flying over by clipping the flight feathers of one wing. Within the pen is a grass pasture with bushes here and there where the hens make their nests by scratching out a bowl-shaped hollow in the ground. The winters being severe, a roosting shed is provided, having a cleated board reaching from the floor to the roosts for the wing-clipped birds to walk up.

GEESE GOOD GRAZING STOCK

Fowls Play Important Part in Utilizing Waste Grain About Stables and Feeding Pens.

Geese have an important part in the endless war on waste. They are in a class with chickens in utilizing waste grain about stables and feeding pens. In a larger measure than chickens or any other kind of poultry they are a grazing stock, getting their living in large part from the ordinary grasses of the pastures, say poultry specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture. When it is considered that the demand for geese is steady, and extended over almost the whole year, not confined to holidays, as in the case of turkeys, that geese excel all other poultry as producers of fat, the importance of geese in the poultry scheme is realized.

STUDY DEMANDS OF MARKETS

AUTOIST KILLED SOUTH OF TOWN

Crookston Man Instantly Killed Under Peculiar Circumstances.

Damon E. Bergerson, a young railroad man whose home is at Crookston, was found crushed to death under his upturned Studebaker car on the Jefferson Highway south of town early Friday morning. Iver Anderson, driving into town shortly after six o'clock, discovered the body with the car resting on it. Unable to do anything alone, he hastily drove into town and summoned medical and other assistance which arrived on the scene of the accident in a short time. The body was still warm when extricated but life as extinct.

Mr. Bergerson had visited friends at Thief River during the evening before and left there during early morn for Crookston. It is supposed he became sleepy and dozed off, as tracks of the car show it left the road gradually for a considerable distance. The road at point of accident is level and the ditches on both sides are shallow. Appearances indicate he dozed while the car gradually worked off the grade, and waking suddenly he cramped the front wheels to bring the car back, which action overturned it. There is no indication that he was traveling at excessive speed as the ground is not torn up where the car overturned.

The remains were shipped to Crookston and funeral services were held there Monday this week.

Mr. and Mrs. N. Delorme, Mr. and Mrs. John Mayhew, Mr. and Mrs. Joe Bencit, Mr. and Mrs. A. Delorme all of Red Lake Falls, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. L. Mayhew of Portland, Ore., and Mr. and Mrs. John Beaudry of Grand Rapids, Minn., who are visiting at the Falls, autoed here last Saturday evening for a visit with Mr. and Mrs. N. Benoit.

Shows at the Imperial will start at 8:00 instead of 8:30, beginning with the show Saturday evening this week.

According to reports the starting point on route two from here will be Hazel starting Oct. 1. There will be no change in territory covered but the carrier will live at Hazel and the route will be known as Hazel route one.

Clinic Friday

The nutritional clinic for St. Hilaire, as announced last week, will be held Friday this week at the school building. This clinic is for children from 5 to 16 years of age. The clinic will start at 9:00 a. m. and parents who plan to attend with their children are asked to be on hand as soon as convenient after the hour named above.

CREAMERY GOES INTO NEW HOME

Building Pronounced The Finest Of Its Kind In The Northwest.

The St. Hilaire Co-operative creamery is now located and doing business in its palatial new home down town after two strenuous moving days. The heavy machinery was taken over immediately after churning was finished Monday, and everything was in place ready to receive cream yesterday morning. While it will take several days to get all connections made, machines bolted down and everything set to rights, there will be no interruption either in receiving cream or manufacturing butter. To Iver Anderson falls the honor of being the first patron to deliver at the new creamery, and W. P. Wilson is a close second.

Many interested out-of-town people have inspected the new plant and all are unanamous in declaring it the finest to be found in this part of the state. The management plans to have a visiting day later on when everything is in shape at which time the public will be invited to inspect the fine plant.

Red Lake County Fair Ends

The Red Lake County Fair which has been in session at the lower Falls first three days this week, closed last evening after a very successful run. Exhibits of produce were extra good, and the stock showing was fine.

The auction sale at Mrs. Miller's takes place Friday this week.

E. Fatenode is waiting to get some wiring done before moving into his new shop.

The first number of the lyceum course will be given at the Imperial Wednesday evening. Oct. 5.

Reduces State Tax

State Auditor R. P. Chase announces that for the first time in its sixty years of statehood, Minnesota will this year omit any tax levy for general revenue purposes. Statutory requirements call for a levy of 4.23 mills which is about half that levied for 1919. At any rate it will be a little relief to the tax burdened people of this state.

C. H. PETERSON PASSES AWAY

Accident Results In Death Of Well Known Sanders Farmer.

C. H. Peterson, one of the best known pioneer farmers in Sanders township, died Sunday night at the hospital at Thief River as result of an accident which occured on his farm Thursday evening. Mr. Peterson was riding a plow when it struck a rock with such force that he was thrown off, landing on his head. His neck was dislocated, and he suffered complete paralysis from the neck down as result of the accident. He was taken to the hospital Friday but surgical aid was of no avail in his case.

Mr. Peterson had been a resident of Sanders for well over thirty years and was well known to practically everybody in this part of the county. He is survived by five grown children, Mrs H. Adams, Mrs. Holm and Mrs. J. Brennan all of St. Paul; Nels and Chas. Peterson who make their homes here. All children were present at the funeral with exception of Charles, who is out on a trip and could not be located in tme to get here for the funeral.

Funeral services were conducted from the home by Rev. O. J. Lundell yesterday morning and interment was made in Rux cemetery.

A very good sale is reported from the C. W. Johnson auction yesterday.

Fred Hanson was down from Thief River yesterday attending to business matters.

The high school basket ball team trimmed the city bunch to the tune of 22 to 6 last Friday night.

Mrs. Hazel Seiff and children are here from Red Lake Falls for a visit at the A. S. Wilson home.

SPUD DIGGING IS UNDER WAY

Delay By Wet Weather For Two Weeks. Harvest Moving Rapidly.

Potato fields in this vicinity are scenes of extraordinary activity this week due to the fact that digging has been delayed by wet weather and special efforts are now being expended to get the tubers to market before frost. Most of the larger fields are already dug and the smaller ones will be dug this week. The market took on a weaker tone this week owing to many shipments of immature and spoiled potatoes coming in. With the crop for the entire country something like 50 millions of bushels below normal, higher prices are anticipated when the first marketing rush is over and the select stock begins to move.

The Department of Agriculture has sent out a warning to growers to beware of dealerrs who are trying to force prices down on contracted deliveries as indications are that higher instead of lower prices, will prevail.

A dance will be given at the Imperial ball Saturday evening this week.

Game Warden Wm. Munch was here Monday making his regular rounds, and incidently looking for game law violators in the game refuge.

Mrs. E. B. Gustafson and sons, Earl and Elvin, and daughter Ruth, of Fertile, and Hal Hovland of Crookston, visited at the John E. Peterson home Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Holmstrom and baby autoed here Sunday from Detroit for a visit at the Rev. A. F. Nelson home.

Mr. Holmstrom returned home the same day, but Mrs. Holmstrom and baby will spend a week here.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE

Notice is hereby given that default has been made in the conditions of that mortgage duly executed and delivered by John Haaven, a single man, mortgagor, to Merchants State Bank of Red Lake Falls, a corporation, mortgagee, bearing date the 22nd day of June, 1915, with power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of the County of Pennington, State of Minnesota, on August 26th. 1915 at 8:30 A. M., in book 8 of Mortgages on page 514, which said mortgage together with the debt secured thereby was duly assigned by said Merchants State Bank of Red Lake Falls, mortgagee, to Northwestern Trust Company, as Trustee under the Last Will and Testament of Stephen Gardner, Deceased, by written assignment dated September 2nd 1915, and recorded in the office of said Register of Deeds on September 9th. 1915, at 1:00 P. M., in book 8 of Mortgages on page 633; which default has continued to the date of this notice by the failure and neglect of said mortgagor to make payment of the sum of One Thousand fifty-five dollars ($1055.00) principal and interest by said mortgage secured, which by its terms became due and payable on June 1st. 1920. And whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sum of $1055.00 with interest thereon at 5½% per annum since June 1st. 1920, and the further sum of $449.92 taxes paid by the undersigned on July 27th. 1921, with interest thereon at 6% per annum since July 27th. 1921, being a total due at date of this notice of One thousand five hundred seventy-nine dollars seventy-five cents $(1,579.75); and whereas the power of sale has become operative and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise has been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof. Now therefore notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, to-wit: The Northeast quarter (NE¼) of Section Twenty-one (21) in Township One hundred fifty-two (152) North of Range forty-one (41) West, of the 5th Principal Meridian for Minnesota, in Pennington County, State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Pennington County at the front door of the Courthouse in the City of Thief River Falls in said county and state on the 17th day of October, 1921, at 10:00 o'clock in the forenoon of that date, at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash to pay said debt of $1,579.75 and interest from date of this notice, and the taxes paid and to be paid if any on said premises, and $75.00 attorney's fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from date of sale as provided by law.

The Art of Life.

The art of life is to keep step with the celestial orchestra that beats the measure of our career, and gives the cue for our exits and our entrances. Why should we willingly miss anything, or precipitate anything, or be angry with folly, or in despair at any misadventure? In this world there should be none but gentle tears, and fluttering tip-toe loves. It is a great carnival, and amongst these lights and shadows of comedy, these roses and vices of the playhouse, there is no abiding.—G. Santayana in the Dial.

About Pictures.

Nearly all houses have too many pictures. And yet, paradoxical as it may seem, the introduction of a new picture now and then is an excellent plan. What is needed is a drastic pruning in most homes; in which pictures that have no real merit are sent to the limbo of the attic, while new and worth while studies in color or black and white are hung on the walls to give a new interest and a new beauty.

Ultimate Literature.

Criticism is the youngest of all the literary forms. It will perhaps end by absorbing all the others. It is admirably suited to a very civilized society with rich memories and long traditions. It is particularly appropriate to a curious, learned and polite humanity. For its prosperity it demands more culture than any of the other literary forms.—Anatole France.

How Logansport Was Named.

Among the relics preserved at Terre Haute, Ind., is a target rifle that was, it is said, the means of giving Logansport its name. The story is that a number of frontiersmen, being unable otherwise to reach a decision in the matter, decided to shoot at a target to determine what name should prevail. The marksman who proposed Logansport hit the bull's-eye.

AUTHORS' FLIGHTS OF FANCY

Odd Dedications of Books That Are Not All Complimentary, but Some Decidedly Amusing.

Possibly 50 per cent of the new books contain dedications, most of them simple in form. A few, however, are poetical, or diffusive or humorous, remarks the Detroit News.

Kenneth Harris dedicates his "Meet Mr. Stegg" to "That very rare creature, a well-loved and highly respected critic—my wife."

Dr. John B. Huber dedicates his "Why Die So Young?" to "My wife's mother, young at fourscore—with warm affection."

Another style of dedication was used with a recent book of essays: "To my father, whose violent and persistent efforts to keep me on the farm drove me into a vocation which I love and enjoy." Francis Hackett dedicated one of his books "To my wife, Signe Toksvig, whose lack of interest in this book has been my constant desperation."

The most amusing of dedications, however, is that volume of lighter verse, which was dedicated "To an old sweetheart of mine, who, thank the blessed fates, refused to marry me!"

"Remember to feed the cat, put the bottles out for the milkman, take your meals in restaurant and don't clean house," Polly kissed her husband affectionately and hastened out.

John watched his wife go down the street, waited to wave to her when she reached the corner, then turned away and gazed glumly about the comfortable sitting room, suddenly, for some reason or other, become so forlorn. Yet this sending away of his wife on a little visit to their son had been his own doing. After playing the part of faithful nurse to his six week's attack of rheumatic fever she certainly deserved, now that he was well on the road to recovery, a bit of a vacation.

The first few days of Polly's absence passed away pleasantly.

But by the end of the week he began to look around for something to do and sheepishly recalled his wife's admonition about cleaning house.

As he limped slowly from room to room he was aware that everything was as neat as a pin.

Straightaway John plunged into his task, poking abandonedly into jars and bottles and paper bags, arranging and rearranging things to suit his masculine idea of the way pantry shelves should be.

Two weeks later Polly came home, rosy cheeked once more, glad to see her husband, and overflowing with stories about the darlingness of John, third.

"I just guess you'll be pleased to have some more good things to eat, John dear," she said. "To begin with I'm going to make up your favorite chocolate cake for supper!"

Polly's husband, supremely content to have her back, sat in the old kitchen rocker, comfortably puffing his pipe, his eyes happily watching his wife as she bustled about.

Presently she disappeared into the pantry and he heard her rummaging around. Then she emerged and he heard her say half to herself, "There now, I was afraid I was out of it. But I find I have got a little baking powder after all. Thought I'd have to borrow a mite from Dora."

John chuckled, remembering where he found that baking powder. Why would women, the best of them, mind you, tuck away little dabs of stuff in old envelopes or paper bags and then forget all about them? If it hadn't been for his putting that baking powder into an old baking powder can where it belonged, she'd have had to trot over to a neighbor's, wasting time.

Half an hour later his wife opened the oven door and in his mind's eye John plainly visualized the cake in all its wonderful three-storied glory, each layer a miracle of lightness. An exclamation from his wife punctured the vision.

"Why, why, why, John, I've never had that happen before!" Polly's face expressed utter dismay.

John rose and peered over his wife's stooped shoulder. On the oven rack were three cake tins, each sending forth a delicious odor and containing something that was nicely browned, but which lay flat as the proverbial pancake. "I can't understand it!" Polly wailed.

She walked over to the table, picked up the baking powder can, tipped out a little of the contents in her palm and tasted it. For a moment she stood there with a puzzled frown on her forehead. Then, "That's not baking powder—that's boric acid!" she cried.

For a moment John did not understand. Then, slowly, a great light broke upon him and sheepishly he grinned.

"My fault, Polly," he confessed. "I—I found a little envelope full of white powder on the shelf. It said on it—I thought—B. P. I guess it must have been B. A. Written in pencil, you know, and not very clear. Anyhow, it appeared to me like baking powder and I put it where it belonged."

"Well—of all things!" said his wife. "That's what Mary used to use for the baby—left it the time she was here visiting. I suppose to a man they look exactly alike." She paused and eyed her husband suspiciously. "But what were you doing fooling around those pantry shelves?"

"Cleaning 'em," said John meekly. Then he brightened. "Look here, Polly. Forget about it. I'm punished anyhow by losing the cake!" He looked for all the world like a crestfallen child, like John, Jr., used to when he was a little chap.

Polly melted.

"Never mind, John, you'll get your cake. I'm going right over to Dora's for some baking powder. But while I'm gone, John, don't, don't —" [illegible] interrupted her husband [illegible] again." [illegible]

PROCEEDINGS OF VILLAGE COUNCIL

Regular meeting of the Village Council of the Village of St. Hilaire held at the Village Hall Sept. 6, 1921, 8:00 p. m.

Meeting called to order by president A. J. Hed.

Minutes of last regular meeting read and approved as read.

On motion duly made and carried the following bills were allowed as read:

Red River Power Co. lights for Aug.	$28.87
John Forseen, salary and labor	16.70
Clifford Bilden, labor	2.55
Fellman & Hyland, men and team	15.95
O. Gunstad, publishing proceedings	2.25
Adolph Satterberg, 6570 lbs. hard coal	57.49

On motion duly made and carried, the president was authorized to appoint special policemen for special occasions.

On motion duly made and carried the village levy for the coming year was set at $1500.00 for general village purposes, and $1000.00 for road and bridge purposes.

Councilman K. O. Gigstad seconded by Councilman A. Satterberg, offerd the following resolution, and moved its adoption:

"WHEREAS, E. O. Burkee, owner of lots 13, 14, 15, 16, 17 and 18, of Block 64, Townsite Company's First Addition and the St. Hilaire Retail Lumber Company, owners of lots 19, 20, 21, 22, 23 and 24, of Block 64 of the same addition, presented to the Village Council a petition duly signed, requesting the Village Council to construct a cement sidewalk on the west side of the above described property and that the cost thereof be assessed against same property.

And Whereas, said petition was duly granted and the sidewalk duly constructed and completed on the eleventh day of July, 1921, and the total cost thereof amounting to $205.25, or $17.10½ per lot, was duly paid from the Village Revenue fund; Now Therefore,

Be It Resolved, by the Village Council of the Village of St. Hilaire, Pennington County, Minnesota, that a special tax of $205.25 be levied and assessed against above described property, to be paid in three annual installments, with interest at six per cent per annum from date sidewalk was completed. And that the Village Clerk forward to the County Auditor a copy of this resolution, the total amount of said levy, description of property to be taxed, and the names of the owners thereof."

Upon roll call, all members voted "yes," when the above resolution was declared duly adopted.

A. J. Hed, President.

Attest: M. Fricker, Clerk.

On motion duly made and carried, meeting was adjourned.

The infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Borgie lies very ill with pneumonia at the Warren hospital. Mrs. Borgie has been at her bedside since the latter part of last week.

The entire community was shocked to learn of the death of Mrs. Wm. Reigert at her home early last Thursday morning from a complication of diseases. Deceased had apparently been in the best of health until about ten days before death, so death came as a severe shock to her family and friends.

Mrs. Reigert was forty three years old at the time of death, and leaves to mourn the loss of a kind and loving wife and mother, a husband and six small children. Funeral services were conducted from the home Friday morning by Rev. Sweiger of Thief River Falls. Remains were laid to rest at Greenwood cemetery, beside her two children who preceded her to the Great Beyond. The heartfelt sympathy of the community is extended to the grief stricken family.

ECUADOR'S AVIATION SCHOOL.

An aviation mission has arrived in Ecuador, composed of French and Italian aviators, who are under contract with the government as instructors and administrators in the new national school of aviation, which has been founded in the port city of Guayaquil. Flights are taking place daily, and visits made to outlying provinces, and even across the main range of the Andes. The Ecuadorian government plans to establish shortly aerial postal routes to the inaccessible sections of the country.

NEW COLLEGE DEGREE.

A new medical degree, offered by Harvard, is that of doctor of medical sciences (M. S. D.). It will be given to men who have specialized in medical research and the laboratory development of medicine, rather than in the clinical branches. It is hoped that by the establishment of this new degree more medical students will be induced to take up research work.—Science Service.

They begin the performance by taking a dose of bhang, a powerfully stupefying drug [illegible] they are lowered into a tomb where they remain in a profound trance for from six to eight weeks. When resurrected they are wan, haggard, weak and wasted.

No explanation of this extraordinary power is forthcoming. Investigations prove that the pulse cannot be felt and there is no evidence that the heart continues to beat. The performer of the apparent miracle does not appear to breathe and makes no movement whatever.

The power resembles that of hibernating animals. A marmot can live six months without food or water, and the story is told of a wonderful Egyptian snail which was brought from Egypt apparently dead in 1846, and placed in the British museum. Five years later a growth was noticed on its mouth, and on being taken from the card to which it was gummed and placed in water it soon became active and ate cabbage leaves.

CHANGED HIS MIND

The Lambs barber shop is in the basement and patrons reclining in chairs may gaze up at the passers-by on the sidewalk. A man who had evidently the need of hot towels watched a woman passing up and down in front of the club. His tortured nerves could no longer stand it and so he said to the barber:

"What is that homely woman doing paddling up and down out in front?"

The barber glanced up and said with a grim calmness: "The lady is my wife and is waiting for me." Then he added: "Will you be shaved, sir?"

"No," said the patron. "If your razor slipped as my tongue did just now—off would go my head."—New York Times.

EXTRAORDINARY INDUSTRY

[illegible]

[illegible] United States Department of Agriculture. To obtain this greater production not only should the fowls be young and of a good laying breed, but the feeder should have a full knowledge of the proper feed and how to prepare it. And this can be achieved only by study and care.

Nutriment in the food of laying hens serves a twofold purpose—to repair waste and supply heat to the body and provide the egg-making materials. As only the surplus over what is needed for the body is available for egg production, the proper feeds should be given in sufficient quantities to induce this production.

In feeding poultry a valuable lesson may be learned from nature. In the spring the production of eggs is an easy matter. Fowls at liberty to roam find an abundance of green and animal feed on their range, which, with grain, provides a perfect ration for laying hens. In addition to this they get plenty of exercise and fresh air. So far as possible, then, the feeder should try to make these winter conditions springlike.

Two systems are used in feeding fowls—the dry mash and the moist mash, although in the dry-mash system a light moist mash often is fed. By the term "mash" poultrymen mean a mixture of ground feed, either moist or dry. The greatest advantages to be derived from the dry-feed system are the saving of labor and the lessened danger of bowel trouble resulting from sloppy or soured mashes. In the dry-feed system for laying hens, as practiced successfully on a New York poultry farm, the grains fed are as follows, in the proportions indicated. This mixture is scattered in the litter early in the morning and again at about 11.30 a. m., and this induces abundant exercise. A hopper containing dry mash is hung against the wall. The mash is made of these ingredients in the proportions indicated (by measure):

The hopper containing this mash is kept before the fowls all of the time.

Corn is the most popular of all the grain feeds for farm poultry, probably because of its abundance and comparative cheapness, and because it is relished over all other grains. It should [illegible]

PIONEER DIES IN MINNEAPOLIS

Mrs. Anna G. Sandberg, a former resident of this community, died Thursday last at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Justis Johnson, in Minneapolis. Mrs. Sandberg, who was nearly eighty years of age at death, came here with her husband in 1880 and settled on a farm seven miles west of town where they resided until 1909 when they moved to Crookston where they made their home until the death of Mr. Sandberg years ago. Mrs. Sandberg has since made her home with her daughter in Minneapolis. She is survived by five sons and three daughters: Mrs. Emma Schusser of Red Lake Falls, Mrs. Sholander of Little Falls, Mrs. J. Johnson of Minneapolis, Chas. Sandberg of Eveleth, A. G. Sandberg of Crookston, A. P. Sandberg of Fargo, J. W. Sandberg of Yakima, Wash., and Victor, who resides in Canada.

Funeral services in Minneapolis were conducted by Rev. H. P. Johnson, a former neighbor of the Sandberg family when they resided here. The remains were shipped to Crookston where services were conducted Monday by Rev. Moody, and interment was made beside the remains of Mr. Sandberg in Crookston cemetery.

New Publisher

J. E. Arneson, who recently purchased the Tribune at Thief River Falls, took charge of that publication last Saturday. Mr. Arneson is an old hand at the newspaper business and will undoubtedly give Thief River Falls a newspaper of which they will feel proud. The Spectator joins with others in bidding him welcome to his new field.

Sam Haislet, former Red Lake Falls publisher, who is now traveling for the Western Newspaper Union, was here for a short time Tuesday. Mr. Haislet is well acquainted thru this part of the county, and he met a number of old friends while here.

Mr. and Mrs. Hans Wilson autoed to Grand Forks for a visit at the McAllister home Monday. They also visited with Mr. and Mrs. J. LaPlante at Crookston before returning home Tuesday night.

Several big machines are at work on the streets at Thief River preparing them for paving which is expected will be laid before snow flies.

Hurt In Auto Mishap

Mr. F. Harris, a Crookston cigar maker, was severely cut about his face and hands last evening when the car in which he was riding collided with a truck near the Rossendahl farm north of town this place. Mr. Harris, who was thrown thru the windshield of his car suffering several gashes, had his wounds dressed by Dr. Bjerken and left last evening for home. The truck was making a wide swing in order to negotiate the turn safely, and occupants of the other car misunderstood its purpose, and it was while they were both trying to get back to the right side of the road that the accident occured.

Gives Auto Law Warning

State officials have started an investigation following a report that hundreds of car owners in Minnesota are either carrying foreign licenses, or have neglected to buy the Minnesota issue for this year. Local officials in all parts of the state will be called on soon to furnish a list of such offenders in their respective localities, and prosecution in such cases will follow swiftly.

Community Club Meets

First meeting this fall of the St. Hilaire Community Club was held at the school building last Friday evening. A very fine program was rendered, and all present had a good time. Owing to the busy season being on at this time, attendance was not as good as at some of the former meetings.

Testing the Hairdresser's Touch.

In Berlin there is a "school" where it is the aim not merely to teach the students what to do, but to instruct them thoroughly in the best way to do it, and there is a test which they all have to meet before they are judged to be competent hairdressers. This machine is specially designed to test the user's ability to comb hair without pulling or jerking or breaking it. By recording the tension at all times during the combing, it gives a complete indication of the manner in which the wielding of the comb progressed.

RETURNS FROM TRIP TO SWEDEN

After having spent the summer months at his birthplace in Sweden, Andrew Soderberg arrived here Thursday to spend a few days with old friends before leaving for his home at Berkley, Calif. Mr. Soderberg found the old country much changed. Instead of conditions such as they were when he left, he discovered the people over there were using, and were familiar with, everything in way of modern convenience that is enjoyed in this country. Cheap electrical energy has given Sweden great impetus as a manufacturing country. After landing in the U. S. A., Mr. Soderberg spent a few days at Washington, D. C., visiting with his son, Milton, who is employed by a leading daily paper in the capital city. He leaves the latter part of this week for home, stopping at Tacoma and Seattle enroute, to greet a number of friends among the former St. Hilaireites who make their home in those cities.

Moving Store Stock

Ole Mathson, who recently purchased the Carl Korstad store at Highlanding, is moving his stock of goods from here to that place. Mr. Korstad is taking a quantity of goods as part of the transaction and is going to open a new place at the Red Lake Indian Agency. Mr. Mathson figures it will be more convenient for him to operate a branch at Highlanding than to maintain a store here.

Clinic Held Friday

A nutritional clinic was held at the school building last Friday by Dr. Stewart of St. Paul assisted by Miss Marie Knutson the county nurse, and by Mesdames E. O. Burkee, O. Gunstad and A. F. Hall. All children between the ages of 5 and 16 years, were weighed and all who were found ten per cent underweight, were given a thoro examination.

Ernest Patenode moved his barber shop equipment Friday into new quarters in the basement of the creamery. The new stand has a bath room in connection, and is equipped with every convenience.

Mr. and Mrs. Rick Larson have moved into the Ben Lardy residence on Water Street and will make their home there the coming winter.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE

Notice is hereby given that default has been made in the conditions of that mortgage duly executed and delivered by John Heaven, a single man, mortgagor, to Merchants State Bank of Red Lake Falls, a corporation, mortgagee, bearing date the 22nd day of June, 1915, with power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of the County of Pennington, State of Minnesota, on August 26th, 1915 at 8:30 A. M., in book 8 of Mortgages on page 514, which said mortgage together with the debt secured thereby was duly assigned by said Merchants State Bank of Red Lake Falls, mortgagee, to Northwestern Trust Company, as Trustee under the Last Will and Testament of Stephen Gardner, Deceased, by written assignment dated September 2nd 1915, and recorded in the office of said Register of Deeds on September 9th. 1915, at 1:00 P. M., in book 8 of Mortgages on page 683; which default has continued to the date of this notice by the failure and neglect of said mortgagor to make payment of the sum of One Thousand fifty-five dollars ($1055.00) principal and interest by said mortgage secured, which by its terms became due and payable on June 1st. 1920. And whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sum of $1055.00 with interest thereon at 5½% per annum since June 1st. 1920, and the further sum of $449.92 taxes paid by the undersigned on July 27th. 1921, with interest thereon at 6% per annum since July 27th. 1921, being a total due at date of this notice of One thousand five hundred seventy-nine dollars seventy-five cents $(1,579.75); and whereas the power of sale has become operative and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise has been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof. Now therefore notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, to-wit: The Northeast quarter (NE¼) of Section Twenty-one (21) in Township One hundred fifty-two (152) North of Range forty-one (41) West of the 5th Principal Meridian for Minnesota, in Pennington County, State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Pennington County at the front door of the Courthouse in the City of Thief River Falls in said county and state on the 17th day of October, 1921, at 10:00 o'clock in the forenoon of that date, at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash to pay said debt of $1,579.75 and interest from date of this notice, and the taxes paid and to be paid if any on said premises, and $75.00 attorney's fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from date of sale as provided by law.

The children in the nursery were playing and Clarence had taken upon himself the task of representing Napoleon, a picture of whom he had encountered in an illustrated volume belonging to his father.

At the urgent request of Clarence, mother provided him with a paper hat, to which he added a plume forcibly taken from a neighbor's chicken. He then provided himself with a belt belonging to father and devised a serviceable sword of wood. After consulting the portrait of Napoleon for the last time, he discovered that something was wanting in his own make-up.

Mother, however, thought that he "looked all right," to which Clarence took exception, saying:

"No, mother, I'm not complete. I ought to have a couple of scrubbing brushes for my shoulders."—Philadelphia Ledger.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE

Notice is hereby given that default has been made in the conditions of that certain mortgage duly executed and delivered by Sam B. Swanson and Caroline Swanson, his wife, mortgagors, to Merchants State Bank of Red Lake Falls, a corporation, mortgagee, bearing date of November 17th, 1915, with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of the County of Pennington, State of Minnesota on the 2nd day of December, 1915 at 8:00 o'clock A. M., in Book 2 of Mortgages on page 627; which said mortgage together with the debt secured thereby was duly assigned by said Merchants State Bank of Red Lake Falls, mortgagee, to Northwestern Trust Company, Trustee under the last Will and Testament of William Delaney, Decedent, by written assignment dated January 28th 1916, and recorded in the office of said Register of Deeds on January 31st. 1916, at 8:00 o'clock A. M., in Book 56 of Mortgages on page 64; which default has continued to the date of this notice by the failure and neglect of said mortgagors to make payment of the sum of $1477.00 principal and interest by said Mortgage secured, which by its terms became due and payable on November 17th. 1920. And whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice under the terms and conditions of said mortgage the sum of $1400.00 with interest thereon at five and one-half percent (5½%) per annum since November 17th. 1920, and the further sum of $77.00 interest coupon by said mortgage secured with interest thereon at five and one-half per cent. (5½%) per annum since November 17th. 1920, and the further sum of $319.69 taxes paid by the undersigned on September 10th, 1921, and interest thereon at the rate of six per cent per annum since September 10th. 1921 being a total due at date of this notice of One thousand eight hundred sixty-eight dollars and forty-four cents ($1868.44); and whereas the power of sale has become operative and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise has been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof. Now therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, to-wit: South half (S½) of Northwest quarter (NW¼) and Lots Three (3) Four (4) of Section Five (5) in Township One hundred fifty-two (152) North of Range Forty (40) West of the 5th principal meridian, in Pennington County, State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Pennington County at the front door of the Courthouse in the City of Thief River Falls in said county and state on the 21st day of November, 1921, at 10:00 o'clock A. M. at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash to pay said debt of ($1868.44) and interest from date of this notice, and taxes paid and to be paid if any on said premises and Fifty dollars ($50.00) attorney's fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure [illegible]

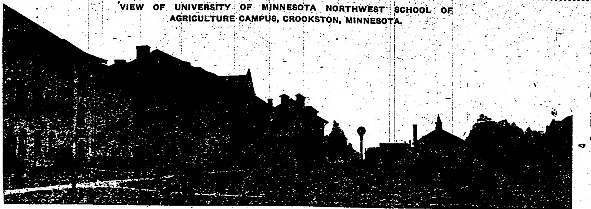
FACULTY OF TRAINED INSTRUCTORS SECURED

NORTHWEST SCHOOL, CROOKSTON, HAS ENJOYED A REMARKABLE GROWTH SINCE 1906, WHEN IT WAS ESTABLISHED

Complete Agricultural, Home Training, Horticultural, Farm Engineering, Business, Music, English and Citizenship Departments in Charge of Successful Instructors.



VIEW OF UNIVERSITY OF MINNESOTA NORTHWEST SCHOOL OF AGRICULTURE CAMPUS, CROOKSTON, MINNESOTA.

A BEAUTIFUL CAMPUS, FINE BUILDINGS, AND COMPLETE EQUIPMENT

YOUNG MEN AND WOMEN ARE INVITED TO ATTEND NORTHWEST SCHOOL. TERM OPENS OCTOBER 10. A LARGE NUMBER IS ALREADY ENROLLED

Three Large Dormitories and Fully Equipped Dining Hall Is Provided. Expenses Are Low. No Tuition Is Charged. Good, Wholesome Moral Life Prevails at the School. Write to the Superintendent for Full Particulars.

T. M. McCALL
Horticulturist; teaches Plant Life, Garden Crops, Forestry and Potato Growing.

TEACHING STAFF IS APPOINTED

The staff of instructors at the Northwest School is complete in every department, and all the positions are filled, excepting that of school nurse. Because Miss Olga Hanson, who so acceptably filled that position last year may decide to return, this position is left open for the present.

Miss Clara Evenson, a graduate of North Dakota University, will have charge of the work in English, taking the position formerly held by Miss Burns, who was married shortly after school closed. Miss Kneeshaw returns to her former position as assistant.

Professor Ray Dunham, formerly a member of the University of Illinois Soil Survey staff, has joined the Northwest Station corps as field crops man. His experience as a soils expert, in addition to his training in farm crops work, will be especially valuable in northwestern Minnesota, with its many quite distinct soil types on which investigational work is needed.

Adolf K. Pierce, a graduate of Wisconsin University, will teach the business training work, including stenography and typewriting, taking the place of Miss Eleanor Bruem, who accepted a very desirable federal position early in the summer.

Herbert S. Hinrich, a graduate of the University of Illinois, will be the new farm motors instructor. Millard Peck, the former instructor, is now permanently employed by the Iowa Highway Commission. Severin Rishovd, a former instructor, is considering the position as assistant.

Upon Miss Lottie Ward's resignation as head of the home economics department, Miss Mildred Schenck, a graduate of Iowa State College, was appointed as her successor. Miss Ward is to be married soon. Miss Bernice Nolan will return as domestic art instructor.

The live stock position will be filled by O. M. Kiser, formerly live stock extension worker at the Northwest School. He is at the present time county agent in Goodhue county, one of the largest and best agricultural counties in Minnesota. Mr. Kiser assumes his work at the Crookston School sometime this month.

Misses Louise Pederson and Julia Aune will resume their work in the music department when school opens on October 10. Considerable new music has been ordered. Elmer F. Uggen, Crookston, has accepted the position of band leader. The prospects for a splendid year in music were never better.

Henry P. Constans, a graduate of Carleton College, and a member for two years of the Intercollegiate debating team, and an expert basket ball player, will join the staff on October 1 in the position of assistant preceptor, instructor and basket ball coach. He comes to the school with the highest recommendations possible as a man and teacher.

Harvey Hoberg, the Northwest Station poultryman, will continue in charge of the poultry department during the present year. Extensive improvements are being planned in this department. Mr. Hoberg has rendered valuable assistance in judging poultry at fairs during the past summer, and in training poultry demonstration teams, that has evoked favorable comment for his work. He is a very enthusiastic poultryman.

Professors T. M. McCall, A. M. Foker, A. H. Larson and E. R. Clark have spent a busy summer in charge of their respective departments. In order that everything will be in readiness when school opens, extensive supplies and laboratory material have been secured and all the equipment put in shape.

R. S. DUNHAM
Field Crops and Soils Instructor; teaches Forage Crops, Soils Management, Elements of Soils and Farm Management.

BERNICE NOLAN

tle of their unselfish spirit and be inspired to an attempt to emulate them."

Ole A. Flaat, '16, of Fisher, emphasizes "learn to associate" in his estimate of the value of the training given at the Aggie School. He states: "Among the factors which contribute toward a modern education, the experience of meeting, mingling, and adapting oneself to the wishes, rights and methods of one's fellow men, is of great importance. This is not taught successfully through books, but by experience alone.

"I feel that the dormitory life I enjoyed at the N. W. S. A. was a unique experience, which in itself was entirely educational. I believe that the living together with a large number in a dormitory, under the guidance and with the companionship of competent instructors, is one of the large benefits derived by attendance at the N. W. S. A. This is a factor well worth the consideration, and should not be overlooked by one who wishes to get the most out of his school years."

Peter Ness, '17, of Ferris, writes interestingly about his views of the Aggie School: "It is perfectly clear to me that I was greatly benefited by my stay at school, and though I spent some hard earned dollars there, much needed for other purposes, and though I spent some precious time there, I have never regretted that I took the course.

"More valuable to me than any other training or knowledge I received at the N. W. S. A., was that of public speaking and debating. It has stood me in good stead on different occasions. Without this training I should have found it hard or even impossible to overcome that diffidence which would have prevented me from speaking in public.

"If I should say anything further, I would say that a dormitory school such as the N. W. S. A., gives a splendid opportunity for intimate acquaintance and friendship among students and teachers. We lived together the clock around.

"In addition, at the Aggie School we were given the opportunity to see and hear some really big men and women. People prominent in state and even national affairs, appeared there to speak."

Promising Outlook Predicted for Fall Term of Northwest School

Many Enrolling For School Year Which Will Start October Tenth

Former Students and Members of the Faculty, Parents of Pupils and University Officials Join in Praise of Northwestern School of Agriculture. Teaching Staff Will Have Several New Members This Year.

Superintendent C. G. Selvig and his corps of assistants are busy making preparations for the opening of the Northwest School of Agriculture Oct. 10. A bright outlook for a large enrollment is predicted by Mr. Selvig who announces that enrollments are being received daily. "This indicates" Mr. Selvig declared, "that despite the business and crop depression the farmers are raising the money to send their sons and daughters to school. They realize that what may seem like a large expense now will soon prove a tremendous asset when the time comes when the son can employ the knowledge he gained at an agricultural school to the benefit of the farm."

The Northwest Monthly, the miniature newspaper issued by the school, contains a number of interviews from former students, ex-members of the faculty, parents of students and university officials which are unanimous in their approval of the Northwest School's activities and the benefits derived by young men and women attending that institution.

.C. G. SELVIG

Whose Superintendency has Witnessed the Great Growth of the Northwest School.

PARENTS EXPRESS THEIR OPINION

The viewpoint of the parents is always of vital importance in estimating a school. For that reason, there appear in this issue of the Northwest Monthly, a number of statements from parents, that are of interest. Doubtless there are many others whose statements would emphasize different phases of the influence of the institution, while others, again, would point out ways for possible improvement. It is of utmost importance for the school to maintain a close contact with the homes from which the students come. To this end, all suggestions for remedying defects and strengthening the work are always welcome and will be greatly appreciated by the faculty.

From among a number of letters received, the following have been selected as representing different sections of our district. Being written by perents, thus giving their viewpoint, they should carry much weight to parents of prospective students:

Erick Anderson.

Erick Anderson, of Oak Park Farm, near Gonvick, has three boys who have attended the Red River Valley farm school. He gives an interesting statement:

"Being a parent of three boys who have attended the N. W. School of Agriculture, I feel that I can comment authoritatively upon the value of the school. I feel that this school is positively everything that a school of its kind should be. It is putting out many fine girls and boys with good, strong character as a result of its excellent instruction. I will assure anyone that wishes to send their boys and girls there that the best results will be obtained."

Peter Lindahl.

Peter Lindahl, of Red River Township, west of Hallock, writes:

"Too much can not be said regarding the value of the education as given at the Northwest School of Agriculture, as it is worthy of the greatest praise and support.

"Every young man or woman who has the opportunity will make no mistake in attending this school. The faculty is the best available and is not only capable but makes every effort to bring the school up to the highest standard for the benefit of those who come there to learn.

"Besides the public school, I have sent my children to six different institutions, but of all these, the Northwest School of Agriculture surely is superior along every line."

John N. Sather

From John N. Sather, a farmer living near Halstad, comes a convincing statement:

"I, for my part, feel that the Northwest School of Agriculture is one of the best schools in the state; first, it takes into consideration all phases of farm life; second, it is so located as to give the boys and girls of the Red River Valley an opportunity to attend school near home, and, third, the school terms are so arranged as to give the children a chance to stay home during the busy seasons. In addition, the boys and girls are well looked after while at the school, in charge of a well trained and capable faculty. I feel as if I have a right to say a few words in favor of the Northwest School of Agriculture, as I have had three of my sons there, and they have all benefited greatly by having attended the school.

Regis Huot

Regis Huot, of Huot, in Red Lake County, gives another viewpoint regarding the school that is of interest.

"I have had the pleasure of having a son and daughter complete a course at the Crookston farm school, and can justly say that the benefits derived by these students from an educational standpoint, and from a standpoint of cooperation and good fellowship derived from pleasant companionship, cannot be surpassed under any condition. I feel today, as they do, that it has been the most instructive period of their lives."

Sen. James Cumming

Senator James Cumming, of Mallory, Polk County, writes convincingly regarding agricultural education.

"Since the dawn of civilization, it has been deemed necessary to train people for certain vocations. The professional man has spent years in training and study. The experiences of others with reference to their particular professions have been carefully sought and treasured, and so along many lines. The business man and the professional man have received special training so as to be efficient in their chosen vocations.

But not until in recent years has it been deemed necessary that the young man and woman who contemplate making their homes on the farm, should receive a special course at some agricultural school. The fact that we have located in our midst a state institution for the purpose of giving special education and training to the boy and girl who expect to engage in the business of farming, should awaken a special interest in the subject. The Northwest School of Agriculture, located at Crookston, should hold the center of interest for every boy and girl who contemplate making farming their life work.

It has been amply demonstrated that boys and girls who have taken a course at this school have been repaid a hundred fold. It has been my privilege to come in contact with and observe the young men graduates of the school. They are invariably making a success, and to step into a home which is supervised by a graduate of the Northwest School, it is at once apparent that special thought and training bring results that are apparent in the arrangement of the home.

We would strongly urge every boy and girl in northern Minnesota who contemplate making farming their life work, to take a course at the Crookston School of Agriculture or some other good school of like nature, where the supervision is in the hands of high minded, clear visioned, efficient men and women. I would also urge parents, although it will be necessary to make sacrifices, to endeavor to obtain for their children this boon. It will be as casting bread upon the waters, which will return manyfold. Besides being a blessing to themselves, this special training will result in a great uplift to the community at large. Nowhere, to my mind, is special training more needed than in solving the problem of the farm, and nowhere can this be better done than in our School of Agriculture at Crookston."

SCHOOLS MAKE USEFUL CITIZENS

Perhaps in no instance is the school's purpose more clearly and convincingly presented than in a letter written expressly for this issue by A. D. Wilson, formerly director of agricultural extension in Minnesota, and himself a graduate of the Central School of Agriculture. In the following statement, Mr. Wilson expresses a life-time conviction based upon mature judgment, regarding education:

A. D. WILSON

Whose Convincing Statement Carries Much Weight.

"Schools now generally offer the kind of education that equips people to be more useful citizens. The Schools of Agriculture, as we have them in Minnesota, offer particularly attractive opportunity for anyone planning to live on or operate a farm. The whole atmosphere of these schools is for better, more wholesome country life, and good citizenship. The courses not only give practical and useful information, but tend to dignify honest, efficient service.

There are two particular points of value in the Minnesota Schools of Agriculture not common to our splendid rural grade and high schools. First, these schools bring together from the whole state or from large districts in the state, splendid young men and women from the best farm homes. It is an education in itself to associate with these young people. The wholesome regulated dormitory and social life of these schools provides opportunity for broadening one's acquaintance and views, that is almost invaluable.

The second particular advantage is the chance these schools offer to students who for any reason have gotten behind in their education. There are many (the writer is one) who have become 16 to 20 years of age with only a rural school education. Such students feel decidedly out of place in a high school, because of being older and larger than the other students. In the Schools of Agriculture these students feel at home because of the more advanced age of all the students, and because of the practical nature of the courses, the years of experience they have had enable them to compete successfully with those who have had more opportunity to attend school.

Dean Coffey's Message to Northwest School

I had the pleasure of visiting Crookston for an altogether too brief halfday in July. I saw more than I expected to see. The buildings, laboratory equipment, herds, flocks, and field crops most favorably impressed me and made Crookston stand out in my mind as a splendid place for farm boys and girls to go for training in the science and art of farming and rural home making.

The little country of Denmark has received world wide notice because it is one of the most progressive agricultural countries in the world. Its prosperity is due to cooperation amongst its farmers in the production and marketing of the best butter, eggs and meat to be found anywhere. Without cooperation Denmark would probably not succeed. Without the knowledge necessary to produce her very superior butter, eggs and meat, she would most certainly fail.

DEAN W. C. COFFEY

Does Denmark believe in Agricultural education? She most certainly does. Her farmers never grow too old to attend some one of her many special schools for farmers. The small farmer with his little one acre farm (some of the farms are so small as this) lays by his savings against the time when he can attend one of these schools for a term. And once he has attended, he looks back upon his stay at school as one of the most significant experiences of his life. Ninety per cent of Denmark's farms are operated by owners, and on these farms one finds homes that are prosperous, enlightened and happy.

That agricultural education has played a leading role in the prosperity, enlightenment and happiness that has come into the farm life of Denmark in the past forty years, is obvious. Crookston's doors are open to the farm boys and girls of the Red River Valley to play a similar role. For your own good and happiness, my earnest wish is that you come. If you do, like the Danish farmer who manages to attend a special school for a term, you, too, will look back upon your experience as one of the most significant of your life.

W. C. COFFEY,
Dean Dept. Agriculture.

UNIVERSITY PRESIDENT CONGRATULATES STUDENTS

Three messages of inspiration to former students and graduates of the Red River Aggie School are given by our three University presidents, who have always been keenly interested in its welfare and progress.

President Lotus D. Coffman.

In extending greetings to this year's senior class, President L. D. Coffman writes of the training given by the school and its graduates:

"The training which you have had at Crookston should have given you a wider view and have made you more keenly sensitive to your responsibilities as citizens. We feel that we have a right to expect that you will discharge your obligations and duties and responsibilities as citizens in an intelligent and efficient manner, and that the communities in which you live will be better because of the education that they have provided for you."

PRES. L. D. COFFMAN
U of Minnesota

President George E. Vincent

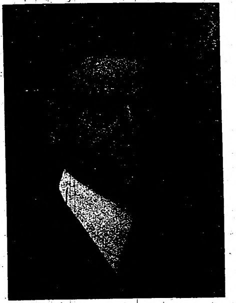
Dr. George E. Vincent stated the aim of the Northwest school in the following greeting to the seniors of 1917:

"You have been preparing yourselves for life in the open country. May you go forth with high hopes and with courage accept the challenge which the country offers you. Resolve to face intelligently and pluckily the problem of scientific farming; of cooperative marketing; of school consolidation and community organization."

—President Marion L. Burton

Dr. M. L. Burton touched upon the school spirit in his message to the seniors of 1920:

"Every one of you is to be congratulated heartily upon the privileges which you have enjoyed at the Northwest School of Agriculture. Your school has exerted a powerful influence over a large area of our state. It has stood for the highest ideals in scholarship and character. Your campus is permeated with a splendid atmosphere and an excellent school spirit."



DR. GEO. E. VINCENT

FACULTY MEMBERS EXPRESS VIEW POINT

This issue of the Northwest Monthly is a Northwest School Edition. In it are gathered up many items of interest to former students and to Red River Valley folks in general, from former faculty members. Others will be included in the next issue. They are unanimous in their estimate of the value of the Northwest School of Agriculture to this section of the state, and cite various phases of school life that appeared most valuable and lasting.

Grace B. Sherwood

"The state agricultural schools have the advantage of supervised dormitory life under the most favorable condition. This is much to be preferred to sending boys and girls away from home to board with no one who is particularly interested in them."

Arnold M. Christensen

"Boys and girls between twelve and eighteen years of age are in the impressionable stage. They readily grasp ideas then and become sympathetic to the idea of staying on the farm, especially when they see the possibilities ahead of them and get the vision which all receive at the state schools."

Mr. and Mrs. T. R. Sewall

"The Red River Valley people have a school at Crookston to be proud of—to cherish, to love and to help—a school whose atmosphere fosters initiative, conscientious effort, truthful appreciation, and whose influence begets an undying desire among faculty and students to put forth every effort to make the Northwest School of Agriculture the fountain of inspiration and interest in the Red River Valley."

J. P. Bengtson.

"It is a privilege to be allowed, through the columns of the Northwest Monthly, to extend my greetings to the alumni and students of the Northwest School of Agriculture. As the time for school draws near, it brings a feeling of lonesomeness. Many pleasant memories come back, of happy days spent at the school. I feel that I shall never have a better opportunity to serve the public good than when it was my good fortune and privilege to be connected with that institution as an instructor.

J. P. BENGTSON

Enthusiastically Recommends the Northwest School.

It is a unique type of school, and offers opportunities such as are possible in few other places. Besides a most practical vocational training, it offers opportunities for general culture and inspiration for good citizenship. It trains toward the farm and farm home rather than away from them, and I feel that in the direction of rural advancement lies a field for our greatest educational efforts today.

Farming has become a most complex science and success in this field of endeavor today demands a careful preparation and training, both theoretical and practical. Science and business principles have also been applied to the management of the home, so that the study of carefully prepared courses is an invaluable aid to the home maker. Rural life has, at all times, been the foundation to the welfare and prosperity of all nations, and if that was ever true, it is true today. We need trained leadership for the country. This, through carefully worked out courses of study in charge of trained specialists, such schools as the School of Agriculture are providing for.

The dormitory life has always appealed to me as a most valuable feature for young people who are obliged to leave home to secure an education. It supplies a wholesome home life that makes the time, outside of class hours, seem like the life of a big family. Where the faculty are associated so closely with the students in all their activities and where such high standards prevail among the student body, this is a wonderful advantage. Not only study hours, but leisure hours, as well, are carefully planned and used for the most complete development of strong manhood and womanhood.

"If I were to suggest the one big thing that could be done for a boy or a girl of the Red River Valley, I would say that it would be to interest him in securing an education such as is afforded in the Northwest School of Agriculture at Crookston.

"A boy or a girl can make no better investment for future happiness and usefulness than the time spent in completing such a course."

FORMER STUDENTS RECALL OLD DAYS

It has often been said that as are the alumni and students, so is the school. No institution can hope to attain greater prestige than its product justifies. In that sense, every alumnus and former student carries the reputation of the school with him in his or her daily work, creating for it a favorable standing, or breaking its record, day by day.

The first reminiscence comes from Louis O. Regeimbal, a member of the first class which graduated, in 1909, who writes: "The features of the Northwest School that appealed to me were the homelike atmosphere that prevailed at the school, and the personal interest and responsibility that was manifested by the faculty towards the students."

Carl Berg, '12, finds difficulty in making a selection of the principal theme to be included in his message. He writes: "I have observed all the time during the past twelve years what a wonderful thing it is to have dormitories and home supervision for the young folks, especially those of the age attending the Northwest School of Agriculture. In addition to the prescribed courses of study, I feel that the social activities at the school, including debating, athletics, glee clubs and others, provide an educational enterprise that every young man and woman of the Red River Valley should take advantage of by reason that it is complete. The school not only builds character and develops the mind and body, but imparts to the young man and woman the fundamental principles of agriculture and home making, which are the foundation of our great nation."

Gertrude Osterloh, of Angus, who is now a student nurse at Bethesda Hospital, Crookston, found somewhat the same difficulty in presenting her views as to the benefits she received. She states: "At the N. W. S. A., I received a great deal out of so many things that I would hardly know just from which I had the most benefit. My greatest interest was in nursing and consequently any courses that involved this branch appealed to me the most."

Nels Palm, '14, Alvarado, president of the N. W. S. A. Alumni Association, found in the regular agricultural work a very valuable training. In addition, he states: "The School has also such activities as athletics, music, Y. M. C. A., and debating societies, which are of great help to the students when they return to their respective communities."

Oscar Tunheim, '17, who is managing a farm near Newfolden, besides taking care of a fine chubby baby boy, between times, must have had in mind the fine moonlight evenings of school days, when he wrote: "The memory of the four years I spent at Crookston is more like a pleasant dream than anything else. It is a place that is just like Home, Sweet Home, with its staff of well trained teachers and fine spirit." No school can have a nobler ideal than such a one.

Guy Spokely, '18, in an unguarded moment, gave his verdict, which was very similar, when he stated "The happiest days of my life were those spent at the agricultural school, those spent in the dormitory." He added that, while the preceptors imposed the dictates of stern duty upon him once in a while, he did not mind, as he hardly expected to have his own way all the time.

Mrs. Harold H. Grandy (Blanche Morrison), '16, now living in Minneapolis, writes in no uncertain terms of the value of the home training work taken at the N. W. School. Harold Grandy, '15, also a graduate, states he is willing to present himself as unanswerable evidence in affirmation. She goes on to say: "During my three years study at the N. W. School of Agriculture, '13 to '16, I am sure that the most practical knowledge acquired by me was in the study of domestic science, especially in cooking and home management, which have been of great benefit to me."

Theodore Peterson, '19, of Fisher, is another alumnus who has a clear idea of the benefits he received at the school. He writes: "I do not think there is a better school for a person to go to if he plans to be a farmer, and if his plans change, he will have no loss. What I liked best at the Agricultural School is the way the students are looked after. They receive real home care. Debating, association with students and faculty, and horticultural work, benefited me most."

Captain Martinus Stenseth, '16, who won signal honors in France, and has the distinction of being Minnesota's highest "ace" in the A. E. F. air service gives his viewpoint:

"By attracting a class of students that would not otherwise secure further education, the N. W. S. A. is serving a very useful purpose. The school creates an initial ambition in such students and sends them back to their farms with new aspirations, or directs them to other positions of service."

From Roseau county, Clarence Lee, '18, takes pen in hand and expresses himself: "My opinion of the Northwest School is that the training given there is a very well balanced ration, and for a dual-purpose man, or woman, I believe no other school can beat it! I might say that the studies, Rural Sociology and Marketing, broadened my views of world economic affairs, which, I believe, has been beneficial to me."

Harold B. Schuck, '15, has expressed in beautiful language two great assets in his life that he gained at school:

"The two greatest and most distinct benefits, as I see them now, are—first, the friendship and happy acquaintance with my schoolmates, and, through them, the understanding and feeling of kinship with their folks, who, in their strength and vision, have made this country. Second, the knowing and having the benefit of associating with the faculty who, by their precept and practice, gave me an example of honest and loyal devotion to their fellow men. Having had this privilege, one would be a poor fellow who could not assimilate a lit-

THING THAT COUNTS

By MARGARET RAND.

(©, 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

The hotel basked in the July sun, and in darkened rooms the guests dozed and rested after the midday meal. Out in the hammock under the trees, Milly pretended to read, but her moody gaze was fastened on the distant mountains.

Presently, voices and laughter drifted across the air and Alita came out on the piazza, surrounded by practically all the male contingent of the hotel. They paused as they passed the hammock and Harold called: "Come on, Milly, we're going over to the Robber's Cave."

"Oh, yes, do come," gushed Alita. "Come and help me take care of all these boys."

"Thank you," answered Milly, coolly, "but I prefer my hammock today."

As the rest moved on Harold lingered a moment. "Don't see why you will never go anywhere with Alita," he expostulated. "She's an awfully jolly girl."

"That is hardly the way she impresses me," replied Milly, "but as a movie vamp she is perfect."

"Well," faltered Harold, "I promised to go, and I've got Alita's sunshade. I'll have to hurry. Good-by, Milly."

From a corner of the piazza Mr. Borden, proprietor of the hotel, and his wife, watched this little scene with indignation.

"That young good-for-nothing!" Mr. Borden stormed. "Waiting on Milly hand and foot until this movie queen appeared, and then running after her like all the rest of them. Thought he had some sense."

"It makes it rather dull for Milly," said his wife regretfully.

"I've got an idea," said the old man, slowly. "There must be some young college fellow who would be glad of a vacation free and a chance to devote himself to a pretty girl."

A few days later Stanley Hall arrived, and after a long conference with Mr. Borden was installed as one of his guests. He was a clean-cut athletic young man, a fine dancer and delightful companion, and Alita was filled with amazement and envy, as he ignored her charms and devoted himself to Milly.

Late that evening Stanley had left Milly in a secluded corner of the piazza and gone in search of her wrap. Presently from an open window came the low-toned conversation of Alita and Harold.

"Of course I'm not certain," said Alita, "but it struck me as queer from the first that Mr. Hall couldn't see anyone but Milly Osborne. And now this letter from Bob says one of the professors asked him if he would like to go to a hotel and devote himself to a young lady.

They moved away from the window and Milly fled to her room.

Tired out, she at length flung herself upon the bed and slept in utter exhaustion. Toward noon she awoke. Stanley was lounging restlessly about the piazza when at length she made her appearance.

"I was afraid you were ill," he said with relief. "You disappeared last evening and no one knew why."

"I owe you an apology for that," she said.

"Milly," he said, "you are adorable."

"Surely, that speech is not a part of your bargain," she answered.

"My bargain!" he repeated in a puzzled tone.

"Yes," she replied cuttingly. "Did you not bargain with my uncle to rescue his wall-flower and provide her with entertainment?"

A dull red flushed the man's face and neck.

"It's true, isn't it?" she persisted.

"Yes," he answered quietly. "But what difference does that make?"

"Difference!" she cried, choking. "This! That I am ashamed to look anyone in the face again. I could die with the shame and humiliation of it all!"

"Don't, Milly," said the man in a hurt tone.

"It is true, isn't it?" she demanded.

"Yes, it is true," he answered gently. "I was told there was a little girl up here who through no fault of her own was having a rather stupid time, and an affectionate old uncle asked me to help him swing things her way a little, that's all. He offered a certain payment for my time, but for the rest that I have given you he cannot recompense me. Only you can do that, Milly."

"What have you given me that he has not bought and paid for?" she cried derisively.

"My love," he answered steadily.

"You—you love me!" she murmured incredulously.

"Dear heart," he answered, taking her hands, "do you not know?"

For a moment her adoration thrilled her; then she drew away and covered her face.

"Those people at the hotel," she whispered, "they know. How can I meet them again?"

"Sweetheart," he said gently, "what does it matter? They will pass out of our lives, but love will remain with us forever. Nothing else counts, dearest. Remember only that I love you and want you to be my wife."

His kisses were on her hands, her eyes, her lips.

"Oh," she whispered breathlessly, [illegible]

POULTRY CACKLES

CARING FOR GROWING CHICKS

Essentials to Best Growth Are Good Coops, Cleanliness, Feed, Water and Free Range.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The care of growing chicks, especially during warm weather, is most important, say specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture. Every boy or girl member of a poultry club should give them the best of attention if success is to be had. The baby chicks may be smart little fellows from strong, vigorous parent stock, and they may have been brooded carefully for the first two or three weeks, but unless they receive proper care and management during their later growing period they will not develop properly, and many of them will be lost through disease or sickness. The chief essentials to proper growth are good coops or houses, cleanliness, proper feed and water, shade, and free range.

Every coop or poultry house used for growing chicks should be kept clean at all times. Sickness or disease starts usually in unclean quarters, and in such places lice and mites are always more plentiful. Coops and houses should be cleaned and sprayed once a week, and clean shavings, chaff, or sand put on the floor. Examine the chicks and houses often for lice and mites, and if found they should be got rid of at once by following the directions in Department Circular 16, 'Lice, Mites and Cleanliness, which may be had, free, upon application to the division of publications, United States Department of Agriculture.

Young Incubator Chicks Allowed to Run Out on Government Farm at Beltsville.

A variety of feeds, with fresh, clean water, is necessary if chicks are to grow properly. Perhaps the three most necessary for rapid growth are grain feed, green feed and dry mash. Poultry specialists of the department say that in addition to the green feed and dry mash, which should be provided regularly, a grain mixture should be fed night and morning, giving as large a quantity as the chicks will eat clean, but no more. A good grain mixture for growing chicks consists of three parts cracked corn, two parts wheat, and two parts hulled oats. When available, kafir or rolled or hulled barley may be substituted for hulled oats. In localities where hulled oats, kafir, or rolled barley cannot be obtained, or are too expensive, a mixture of cracked corn and wheat only may be fed until the chicks are old enough to eat whole oats, when two parts may be added to the corn and wheat mixture.

A reasonable supply of fresh green feed is almost as necessary as grain for growing chicks. If allowed liberty they will get much of it for themselves, but if confined, or if in quarters where green feed is not abundant, it should be supplied regularly. Lawn grass, beet tops, cabbage and lettuce are excellent feeds. When chicks are confined to brood coops with runs, they should be placed on ground where the grass is green and tender, and as fast as it is eaten off, the coop and run should be moved to a place where the grass is plentiful.

In addition to green feeds and grain, dry mash should be kept before growing chicks at all times after they are three or four weeks old. It is best to feed it in a hopper inside the building, or where it will not be exposed to rain or wet. Here is a good dry mash mixture: Two pounds corn meal, two pounds middlings, one pound oatmeal, two pounds wheat bran, one pound beef scrap and one-fourth pound charcoal. Grit and oyster shell also should be provided.

SMALL FLOCK IN BACK YARD

Two Hens for Each Member of Family Are Recommended as Best by Poultry Specialists.

The average novice can reasonably expect to get an average of at least 10 dozen eggs per hen per year from his small flock in the back yard. On the basis of two hens to each member of the family this will give 20 dozen eggs a year to each person, which amount is about halfway between the average of farm and city consumption. No backyard poultry keeper should be satisfied with less than this, say poultry specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture. Every backyard poultry keeper should try to get as much more as possible. To provide an egg [illegible]

FIVE CHILDREN BURN TO DEATH

Five children of H. Nelson were burned to death early Saturday morning in a fire which destroyed the Nelson store and postoffice at Pine Center, 15 miles south of Bagley. The parents and an infant daughter, who were sleeping in a room on the first floor, managed to escape, but the other children, three girls and two boys, were trapped on the second floor and burned to death.

Road Work Assured

Similar programs are being worked out for other states also.

Cotton-Plant Pest.

The moth known as Alabama argillacea, a serious pest of the cotton plant, is one of the most prolific of insects. In the Gulf states it produces at least seven generations annually, and at the end of the fourth generation the progeny of one moth, if they all survived, would amount to over 300,000,000,000 individuals. — Science Service.

Ole Mathson moved out the balance of his goods to Highlanding first of this week. Henry Goergen has leased the building and already has a grocery stock in. Other lines are expected last of this week.

A Great Artist.

Sir Henry Layard had a short way with omniscient youths, who gushed over Cimabue, Giotto, Daniele da Volterra. "Do you seriously think," he would ask with his rasping drawl, "that any of them can compare with Mortadella da Bologna?" Some would fall into the trap and discourse on the chiaroscuro of that great artist; others, more honest, would invite scorn by confessing ignorance of his work. It was only when they reached home that they discovered that "mortadella" was a sausage.—Living Age.

Keepers of Libraries.

Those who read many books are like the eaters of hashish. They live in a dream. The subtle poison that penetrates their brain renders them insensible to the real world and makes them the prey of terrible or delightful phantoms. Books are the opium of the Occident. They devour us. A day is coming on which we shall all be keepers of libraries, and that will be the end.—Anatole France.

The Minneapolis Bridge Co. has a crew of men at work putting in a concrete and steel bridge on the state road north of the Black River church.

A light snow fell here early Monday morning but it all disappeared with sunrise. Snow is reported both in Dakota and east along the Great Lakes.

Ireland's Many Names.

Scots may be surprised, but in the days of Ptolemy Ireland was known as Scotia! In fact Ireland has had a number of names. Diodorus Siculas calls the Ireland Iris, or Irisi; in the De Mundo, credited by some scholars to Aristotle, it is called Irenne; in the Argonautica of Orpheus it appears as Irinus; Strabo called it Irene; Caesar, Tacitus and Pliny mentioned it as Hibernia; Mela called it Juverna. The native names in Celtic are Ir, Eri, Erin. Plutarch mentions it under the name of Ogygia.

Juvenile Humor.

The poem under analysis was Tennyson's "The Brook" and the pupils were asked to write a sentence containing the words "coot" and "hern." One small pupil turned in this one: "A little girl I know had an awful coot doll, but it wasn't hern."

Annual Conference

The Scandinavian Missionary Society of the North Red River Valley is holding its annual conference at the Mission church here this week, Oct. 12-16. All ministers of the Society and a number of laymen from Mission churches of the Valley are in attendance. The Conference started yesterday at 7:30 p. m. The following days the sessions will be at 11:00 a. m., 2:30 and 7:30 p. m. All cordially invited to attend.

Purchase Farm

Ralph Stephenson and A. F. Hall completed a deal this week whereby they became the owners of the A. T. Anderson farm northwest of town. They expect to do some improving on the place this fall.

The auction sale at Mrs. Ekstrom's place Tuesday did not draw a very large crowd so consequently everything sold at low prices.

Local hunters are scanning the sky for the first evidence of the annual duck migration from the north which generally affords good shooting for a few days

We omitted to mention last week that Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Wilson of Minneapolis are the proud parents of a son born the week previous, and that George has attached Senior to his name as a result.

Mrs. Hazel Nagel left Tuesday for Larimore to visit at the home of her sisetr, Mrs. Power

Three big trucks to be used for gravel hauling on the paving job at Thief River passed thru here last night.

Mr. and Mrs. R. Stephenson, Dr. and Mrs. F. N. Bjerken, Mr. and Mrs. E. O. Burkee. Mr. and Mrs. A. F. Hall, Mr. and Mrs. O. Gunstad, entertained the school faculty at a picnic in Benson's woods last Thursday evening.

Vanity Among Animals.

The investigating scientist who has been studying wild animals has learned that members of the feline tribe do not play with their long claws on the bark of trees to sharpen them, as is popularly supposed, but the antics are a display of vanity on the part of the male, to show how agile and powerful he is.

Duennas' Duties.

The chief lady-in-waiting on the queen of Spain is known as a duenna. In a more general sense Spanish and Portuguese families apply the term to the elderly woman who takes charge of the younger members of a family—a kind of governess or companion.

FARM WAGES SHOW DECLINE

A survey made by the Minnesota Farm Bureau shows average monthly wages paid farm laborers have declined 16 per cent since beginning of 1921. In at least one third of the counties federation officers say, farmers are now paying less than $34 average. Out of the first 40 counties to report in the last survey, 16 declared $30 to be the prevailing monthly wage, while four others set it as low as $25.

To Washington, D. C.

Miss Selma Hoff left Thursday enroute to Washington, D. C., to attend the national convention of postmasters, letter carriers and other postal employees which will be in session in the capitol city this week. She intended to visit with Dr. and Mrs. C. Swanson in Minneapolis, and with friends in Chicago, while enroute.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Goergen retured Saturday from Appleton, Minn., where they purchased a stock of goods a short time ago. The building which they occupied was sold recently so they packed the goods and are shipping them here.

At a family gathering at the Pete Johnson farm last Sunday it was decided to investigate a tree in which a swarm of bees had taken up abode early in the summer. Something like 150 pounds of fine honey was the reward for taking the tree down.

Many summer birds are still to be seen in this part of the state, and no flights of ducks and geese has been noted from north, all of which indicates that the prediced very early winter may not materailize as soon as expected.

Proves Wisdom of Heslod.

The many prove the wisdom of Heslod, who says that the road to wickedness is smooth and very short, and there is no need of perspiring; but before virtue the immortal gods have placed the sweat of labor, and long and steep is the way thither, and rugged at first; but when you have reached the top, then, however difficult, it becomes easy.—Plato.

COMMON VS. SELECT.

Bishop Homer Stunz said at a dinner in Omaha:

"If we were all as ambitious to progress ethically as our war profiteers are to progress socially, it would be a very good thing.

"A war profiteer decided recently to drop the Baptist faith and turn Episcopalian, as all the bang-up people in town went to the Episcopal church.

"So he visited a book store and asked for the hymnals, Bibles and so forth that he would need in his new way of worship.

"He seemed well enough pleased with the volumes that the salesman laid before him till he came to the book of Common Prayer. Over this he frowned and shook his head.

"'This'll hardly do,' he said, and he tapped the title with his forefinger. 'Let's have something a little more selecter, bo.'"

Done With It.

He—"Do you think you could grow to love me?" She—"I'm afraid not; you see, I've done growing."

MADAME VALESKA

By MOLLIE MATHER.

(©, 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Fenton fidgeted uncomfortably in the surroundings which were foreign to his frank wholesomeness. Always he had hated subterfuge of any kind, yet here he was in this dim interior redolent of sandalwood at Lilla's request. Lilla suffered some ailment which, while doctors considered it unimportant, was to Lilla a real affliction.

The pain of her arm had necessitated Fenton's doing her hair that morning, and one of Lilla's studio friends assured her Madame Valeska could miraculously locate and cure pain where physicians failed.

Madame Valeska was a trance-medium, in great favor among the young art students. Lilla had at once insisted that Fenton go and hold audience with this famously clever seer, regarding her own condition. And the indulgent brother, fretting his impatience, had never-the-less gone.

Perhaps, when this Madame Valeska had demonstrated her infallibility in Lilla's case, the girl would be satisfied and cured. He intended to give her no information in her questioning. Into the softly lighted waiting room, came presently another seeker after hidden knowledge. Fenton smiled grimly at the patient waiters already assembled. But this girl appeared unlike them to share his own unrest—almost his own humiliation. Like some small gray shadow, she retired diffidently to the recess of the long room. She had cast him one frightened glance in passing, and impulsively—Fenton hardly knew why—he followed, perhaps, to give assurance, or to laugh away her significance of the occasion.

The girl's face was as white, and fear-stricken, as a child's in face of disaster.

"Well," he asked the young woman in the gray frock. "What is your particular trouble? And is Madame Valeska to bring the remedy from one of her picturesque trances? The Madame can keep it up pretty well, I am told. I have never before attended this curious kind of entertainment."

But levity evidently could not allay the girl's fears.

"Madame Valeska really visits the spirit world," she told him in an awed tone, "the things she tells are marvelous. But, if you do not believe, why do you come?"

The question was asked not in rudeness, but wonderingly.

"I came," Fenton good-humoredly replied, "to please my fanciful sister, who is as easily impressed as yourself. She hopes that Madame Valeska will influence some kind spirit to take imaginary pains out of her arms,

The little frightened patient nodded. "Madame Valeska will know best what to tell her," she said, "only yesterday I lost my purse, and she found it for me."

"And afterward robbed it for you," Fenton added grimly.

The girl's eyes were reproachful. "Madame has to have money to keep this place up," she reminded him. "Her charge really is not much. That is, when you consider what she does for one."

"Fraud," Fenton contemptuously exclaimed; with real concern he regarded the trusting face before him. "Do not let this seer impose upon you, little girl," he advised. "Make this your last visit." She stood as though considering. But a watchful attendant slipped to her side.

"Madame Valeska," she informed the girl, "will see you now."

The girl did not reappear. Disappointedly, Fenton learned that questioners were dismissed after their audience, through a rear door.

His own turn came next. Theatrical, indeed, was madame's setting. White and small, as a child's, her hands made mystic movements, then Madame Valeska bent above her crystal ball. Fenton folded his arms cynically—but she asked him no questions. Madame, in a voice faint and far away as a musical echo, gave voluntary information. Fenton stared.

"The artist," faltered Madame, "the lovely sister—will yet be famous. Fame is worth the price of a pain—or—two. After all—not serious. The spirits—they tell me, nothing to do. Tell this sister—who is it? Ah, yes, Lilla—to forget the pain—to think nothing of it. To rest—to be much in the fresh air and sunshine—to put her fancies aside. That is all."

Fenton sat blinking, Madame Valeska had gone: After the attendant silently dismissed him through the rear doorway, he stood thinking. Then suddenly and unannounced he entered again the waiting room.

The patients had departed. Still in the shadow of a screen he waited. And after a time, came to him a girl's carefree singing. Into the somber room she came, opening wide to the air, it's windows. Then, amazed, she beheld Fenton. He stood smiling in the eyes of the little gray lady.

"So, Madame Valeska," he said, "that is how you obtain your information. As patient, first in your own waiting room, you hear many confidences."

"Well," shrugged the girl, a laughing daring taking the place of former [illegible]. "Well, you have heard [illegible]

HOW SHE "EARNED" IT.

A hundred women members of a Chicago church informed the minister that each would earn one dollar by her unaided efforts and contribute that amount to the church fund. Many earned their dollar by making babies' clothes, doing laundry work and giving music lessons, but one woman, more original than the rest, made her husband pay her the necessary dollar for the privilege of being shaved by her!

Style in Writing.

In style, as in other things, it is well always to aim at the combination of as many excellences as possible—opposite excellences, it may be—those other beauties of prose. A busy age will hardly educate its writers in correctness. Let its writers take time to write English more as a learned language; and completing that correction of style which had only gone a certain way in the last century, raise the general level of language towards their own.—Pater.

"Dips" Robbed of Haven When Art Center Moves

London.—Burlington House, the present home of the Royal Academy exhibition, does not seem to afford such a fine harvest for pickpockets as the great room at Somerset House, where exhibitions were held until 1837, remarks the London Morning Post. A wooden dado ran round the room, and when after the academy resigned possession, this was removed in the course of renovations, the narrow space between it and the brickwork was found to be stuffed with innumerable purses, ancient and modern—an eloquent testimony to successful pocketpicking and cleverness in disposing of recognizable property.

Cleaning Marble.

To clean marble mix with water five parts of soda, two and a half parts of powdered chalk and two and a half parts of pumice stone (powdered); spread on the marble and wash off with soap and water. The consistency of the mixture when applied should be that of a thin paste.

SEEMS A MYSTICAL NUMBER

In All Known Ages, "Seven" Has for Some Reason Had a Peculiar Significance.

It seems that the number seven has always had some peculiar significance. On the seventh day of the seventh month a holy observance was ordained to the children of Israel, who feasted seven days and remained seven days in tents. The seventh day was supposed to be a Sabbath, or rest for all, and at the end of seven times seven there was to be a jubilee. Jacob served seven years to win Rachel for his wife. Noah had seven days' warning of the flood. Nebuchadnezzar lived seven years as a beast. The Savior spoke seven times from the cross on which he hung seven hours. In Scripture there are seven resurrections mentioned. In the Lord's prayer there are seven petitions. There are seven mysteries of the apocalypse revealed in the seven churches in Asia. In Revelation there is described seven lambs before the seven spirits of God, seven golden candlesticks, a book with seven seals, seven angels with seven trumpets, seven prayers, seven vials of wrath, seven kings, seven thunders and a dragon with seven heads.—Chicago Journal.

FEAR JOHN STEEN IS DROWNED

Fears are entertained at Warroad that John Steen, a former local boy, and a companion have drowned in Lake of the Woods. John and two companions were hunting ducks Saturday when a squall struck their boat capsizing them. All managed to reach shore, after which John and one of the others decided to swim back and attempt to bring the boats in. They were last seen clinigng to the boat which was drifting out into the lake. The survivor, who managed to make his way to a settlement and give the alarm, is seriously ill with pneumonia brought on by exposure and cold. Searching parties have found the boats, minus oars and guns, so there is a bare possibility that the boys might have reached shore and are lost in the muskegs. As the lake water is generally cold at this time of the year, it is feared they became numbed from exposure and lost their lives in the lake.

Surprise Their Pastor

Members of the congregation of the Norwegian Lutheran church had a surprise party on their pastor, Rev. C. M. Grimsrud, immediately following services at the local church last Sunday. The evening was spent in coversation during which the ladies served a wolesome lucheon to all present. Rev. Grimsrud was presented a sum of money upon the occasion.

Have Narrow Escape

Mr. and Mrs. Carl Krueger and two daughters of Red Lake Falls had a fortunate escape from injury Tuesday afternoon when their car turned over and went into the ditch at the Geske corner on the highway four miles north of here. Mr. Krueger was not familiar with the road and did not realize there was a sharp turn until too late to slacken speed. The car turned completely over and landed right side up in the bottom of the ditch alongside another car that had gone in some twenty minutes before.

Aside from a few scratches and bruises, all escaped injury. The car had its top torn, one wheel broken and a couple fenders bent, but was able to run into Thief River under its own power after being pulled out.

The local school closed Wednesday afternoon and will remain closed until Monday next in order to permit attendance of the faculty at meetings of the Northern Minnesota Educational Association and teacher's institute which are being held at Crookston this week. All local teachers left Wednesday.

Mr. and Mrs. N. E. Beebe and daughter, Lulu, accompanied by Mrs. D. Patterson, Mr. and Mrs. O. Gunstad, auoted last Sunday to the former Beebe farm near Euclid, and later to Crookston for a brief visit with A. R. Jones and daughters, and with Mrs. A. A. Just. They returned home by way of Red Lake Falls the same evening.

The Ladies' Aid of the Mission church will meet in rooms above Nelson's store Friday, October 21. Refreshments will be served by Mesdames H. J. Hanson, Hans Hanson and John Norman. All are cordially invited.

The Huguenots.

Huguenots was the name applied by the Roman Catholics to the Protestants of France during the religious struggles of the Sixteenth and Seventeenth centuries. The term is of doubtful origin. Some authorities say it is corrupted through Ignots, Iguenots, from the German Eidgenossen, confederates; while according to others, the word is a diminutive of Hugo, Hugues, Hugh, a patron saint of Tours.

Married Saturday

Mr. Fred Hanson and Miss Louise Wilson, popular local young people, were united in marriage at Thief River Falls last Saturday evening, Rev. Geo. Larson officiating. Arthur and Tomina Hanson, brother and sister of the groom, acted as attendants. After a short trip over to Grand Forks Mr. and Mrs. Hanson returned here and have started housekeeping in the rooms over Jackson's store. Mr. Hanson has a fine position with the Motor Inn at Thief River, and the young couple may locate in that city when suitable quarters can be found.

Both bride and groom have a host of friends in this village and vicinity who join in wishing them a long and happy married life.

The Reason.

Little Joe was at grandmother's house for dinner. Although fried chicken and many other mighty good things were on the table, Joe did not care to eat much. Then grandmother began to coax him. One thing after another she brought to his notice. Finally she said: "Here's my homemade sugar cookies. Aren't you going to try some of them, dear?" Little Joe attempted a smile, "That's what is the matter," he explained. "I tried too many of them before dinner, grandma."—Indianapolis News.

MISSION MEETINGS ARE HELD HERE

Beginning last Wednesday evening and continuing over Sunday with three sessions each day, the Northren Red River Valley Ministerial Association and the District Conference of the Swedish Mission church held their semi-annual and annual meetings, respectively, at this village.

On Thursday and Friday the Ministerial Association held its sessions. Besides business transactions, lectures were delivered by members upon biblical subjects pertaining to the Christain fundamentals of the christian faith and life. The sessions were attended by a number of visitors, and were inspiring as well as educational.

Saturday the district conference held its annual meeting. Reports were given by the district chairman and evangelists E. F. Seagren and C. A. Beckman. Report was made a church had been built in Ericsburg. The officers for the ensuing year are: Pres. O. J. Lundell, Tthief River Falls; V. Pres., Rev. C. W. Olson; Tien. Sect'y., Rev. W. Drotts, Viking; V. Sec'ty., Rev. O. B. Olson, Crokston; Trustees, Louis Johnson, Tien., P. O. Olson, Warren; Chas. Gustafson, Thief River Falls Louis Johnson was named treasurer. Twenty-nine delegates were in attendance.

The local church gave the visitors a splendid reception, they being entertained in the homes of members of the church. Appreciation of the entertainment was voiced by the visitors.

The semi-annual meeting will be held next spring at Lancaster.

Two Hurt In Spill

A party of autoists from near Mahnomen came to grief on the Jefferson Highway north of town Tuesday when they failed to make the square turn in front of the Geske farm. Their car overturned into the deep ditch at that point, pinning one of the party under the machine. One suffered a broken jaw and the others were more or less bruised.

Miss Eleanor Anderson, former teacher here, and who is now located at Warroad, spent Wednesday here with friends while enroute to Bemidji to attend teacher's institute.

Thief River Falls celebrated the opening of the first block of paving in that city by a pavement dance and general get-together meeting last Tuesday evening. A number of people from here and vicinity were in attendance.

LOST 36 HOURS IN WOODS

Young Girl Turns Up at New Jersey Farm After Night in Woods.

Lakewood, N. J.—Elsie Wolke, eighteen years old, daughter of Karl Wolke, occupant of a small bungalow on the edge of the dense woods here, was returned to her parents after she had stayed for 36 hours in the woods. Searching parties of farmers and police, aided by ten dogs, scoured the woods for the girl, but were unable to find her.

Some time later she entered the home of Morris Kapaloff, a farmer, two miles from here on the road to Tom's River. Her clothes were torn and her face and arms scratched from brambles. She was unable to tell her name, but said the family letter box was 87 on the rural free-delivery route.

Kapaloff learned from the girl that she had slept during the night in a cemetery in the woods, where two parties of searchers had converged during the hunt. She was taken to her home.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE

Notice is hereby given that default has been made in the conditions of that certain mortgage duly executed and delivered by Sam B. Swanson and Carline Swanson, his wife, mortgagors, to Merchants State Bank of Red Lake Falls, a corporation, mortgagee, bearing date of November 17th. 1915, with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of the County of Pennington, State of Minnesota on the 2nd day of December, 1915 at 8:00 o'clock A.M., in Book 2 of Mortgages on page 627; which said mortgage together with the debt secured thereby was duly assigned by said Merchants State Bank of Red Lake Falls, mortgagee, to Northwestern Trust Company, Trustee under the last Will and Testament of William Delaney, Decedent, by written assignment dated January 28th 1916., and recorded in the office of said Register of Deeds on January 31st., 1916, at 8:00 o'clock A. M., in Book 56 of Mortgages on page 64; which default has continued to the date of this notice by the failure and neglect of said mortgagors to make payment of the sum of $1477.00 principal and interest by said Mortgage secured, which by its terms became due and payable on November 17th. 1920. And whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice under the terms and conditions of said mortgage the sum of $1400.00 with interest thereon at five and one-half percent (5½%) per annum since November 17th. 1920, and the further sum of $77.00 interest coupon by said mortgage secured with interest thereon at five and one-half per cent (5½%) per annum since November 17th. 1920, and the further sum of $319.69 taxes paid by the undersigned on September 10th. 1921, and interest thereon at the rate of six per cent per annum since September 10th. 1921, being a total due at date of this notice of One thousand eight hundred sixty-eight dollars and forty-four cents ($1868.44); and whereas the power of sale has become operative and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise has been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof. Now therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage to-wit: South half (S½) of Northwest quarter (NW¼) and Lots Three (3) Four (4) of Section Five (5) in Township One hundred fifty-two (152) North of Range Forty (40) West of the 5th principal meridian, in Pennington County, State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Pennington County at the front door of the Courthouse in the City of Thief River Falls, in said county and state, on the 21st day of November, 1921, at 10:00 o'clock A. M., at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash to pay said debt of $1868.44 and interest from date of this notice, and taxes paid and to be paid if any on said premises, and Fifty dollars ($50.00) attorneys fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from date of sale as provided by law.

STEAL DOOR OFF CALABOOSE

Model Town's Bastile Called Disgrace by New York State Prison Commission.

New York.—Dover Plains, N. Y., is such a model community for law and order that its privately owned jail has become the eyesore of the village. In the report, made public, of the state prison commission, the jail in Dover Plains has been characterized as a disgrace to the community.

The door of the private bastile has been stolen by an outsider, it is reported; most of the glass in both windows is gone, and the running water no longer is confined to the pipes and faucets. The only light in the jail is furnished by a lantern and the report says that there hasn't been any oil in this lamp in months.

SETS ARMY HIKING RECORD

Private John McGregor Makes 500 Miles in Fourteen Days With Full Pack.

Washington.—An endurance test has been completed by Private John McGregor of the Second division, believed by veteran infantrymen here to establish a new record for long-distance hiking with full pack for the army.

Major General Harbold, executive assistant to General Pershing, chief of staff, issued the official reports of McGregor's feat showing that he covered the last 500 miles of the march in 14 days, an average of more than 35 miles a day. The entire distance covered was 1,100 miles, from San Antonio, Tex., to Denver, Colo., and was made in 40 marching days.

Cotton-Plant Pest.

The moth known as Alabama argillacea, a serious pest of the cotton plant, is one of the most prolific of insects. In the Gulf states it produces at least seven generations annually, and at the end of the fourth generation the progeny of one moth, if they all survived, would amount to over 300,000,000,000 individuals. — Science Service.

House of the Blue Door.

The painting of doors and window frames deserves study. A low-roofed house painted gray with blue-green roof, has doors and windows of the same blue-green tone. In its setting of emerald lawn with shrubs of darker green and gravel walk bordered with delphinium of deepest blue the picture presented is vastly pleasing.

The Pothooks and Hangers

By HAROLD SINCLAIRE

(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Jimmy had come early. It was regular lesson night, but the Shark wouldn't appear for perhaps half an hour. Plenty of time for Jimmy in which to learn his fate and—well, he hadn't decided just what he would do after that; that is, in case she wouldn't marry him.

So he sat in the little parlor of Louise's home and waited. Presently she would come in briskly, her brown eyes demure, her lips smiling. She always made you think of a sturdy little wildflower in the woods in springtime. And Jimmy, young lawyer though he was, knew that his heart would skip a beat and his ruddy face take on a still deeper hue as he faced her. He tried to be patient, and as the minutes passed memories came—sweet and bitter—in their turn.

Around that library table in the center of the room he had sat three nights a week with Louise and—yes—Terry Gerard, the Shark—who was the particular fly in Jimmy's ointment. Why did he need a commercial education, anyway—his business didn't require it. Jimmy's did; at least, so he had represented to Louise when he had begged her to teach him the art of shorthand.

So around this table the three had sat—Louise and her two mismated pupils, for they hated each other as much as they loved their teacher. Both had invented their need of a knowledge of shorthand in order to be near the object of their affections. The only difference in their methods was that while Jimmy didn't try to learn, concealing his indifference to the best of his ability, Terry made the most of his lessons and consequently was able to read whole pages of curlicues without a break.

"Red headed shark," growled Jimmy, gritting his teeth. He smoothed his own glossy dark hair and scowled. That shark was to be reckoned with, he was bright and, yes, good looking, and Louise seemed to like him. Of late he had imagined that she preferred him. Only yesterday he had come upon them talking confidentially in low tones when no one was near. Well, the suspense would soon be over. He heard her coming down the stairs, and his heart skipped that beat according to prophecy, as Louise entered in anticipated fashion.

While he was holding her hand, which had been extended in welcome, he looked at it idiotically, as if he had never seen it before.

"Why, Jimmy," said Louise, looking at him in surprise:

Jimmy gulped.

"You promised to write my answer today."

"And so I have."

"Didn't get it," gasped Jimmy. "Mail service punk. Was it yes or no?"

"Silly," she answered, diving into her pocket. "I didn't say I'd mail it to you. Weren't you to come this evening to take your lesson? Well!"

She handed him a notebook, open, pointing to a neat array of pothooks and hangers that adorned the page.

"That is my answer," she told him sweetly.

He looked at it helplessly. "Jehoshaphat!" he exclaimed. For the first time he envied that shark. He could have read those marks. Poor Jimmy couldn't, and he didn't know whether to sink with despair or take his teacher in his arms!

It was at "recess" the night before that it happened. The Shark had left early, Louise had told him goodnight in what seemed to Jimmy a most unnecessarily interested fashion, and Jimmy had forthwith laid his heart and fortune at his teacher's feet. In a sweetly businesslike manner she had promised to write him her answer.

And there it was in his hand and he couldn't read it!

"That is your answer," repeated Louise.

"Yes," Jimmy floundered miserably. She was looking out of the window now. Jimmy set his teeth and began to study those awful marks with a vengeance.

A gasp escaped him. There was a familiar chicken track in that first line. It was the one phrase he had learned very early in the course, thinking some time to use it craftily, "I love you!" He recognized that when he saw it. It was there! He looked closer. Yes, it was there, but what was that silly little mark preceding the word love? It didn't belong! He tried with his finger to remove it—it might be an eyelash fallen there. But it stayed, and Jimmy's brow grew moist with the dawning of an awful thought. Suppose that little fool curved line should be the negative to that sweet phrase! Did she or didn't she? That was the question. It was time to use some of that craftiness.

Pushing back his damp hair and calling to his aid a sickly smile, he pointed to the disturbing curlicue.

"Teacher," he said in a wheedling tone which he sometimes used teasingly, "teacher. you made this character a little lame. I can't quite make it out." He held his breath.

"That," answered Louise, turning to him patiently and spelling the word phonetically, "is 'd-o-n-'t'—half length, you know, to add 't'."

Jimmy stiffened and the notebook fell to the floor. When Louise left it there and turned away again he exploded. Black despair reigned, but rage gained mastery of his tongue.

"I hope you're satisfied," he said thickly. "You've made all kinds of a fool of me—deliberately, too."

Louise raised her finger warningly and listened. "I think Terry's coming," she said. "He's early."

Jimmy swallowed and looked for his hat. He was certain now—the Shark had won. Louise's smile showed that. It was radiant and her face was shining with a glory that only love can bring.

"Can't stay for lesson," he mumbled, cramming the letter into his pocket and making for the door.

"It was a false alarm," said Louise after a moment of looking toward the door.

"That shark——" began Jimmy angrily.

"Isn't he a wonder?" asked Louise, her sparkling eyes upon him. "He can read shorthand like print." Her face was glowing still and Jimmy could stand it no longer.

"Goodnight," he said thickly.

"But," said Louise, innocently. "Have you read all the letter, Jimmy? There are some good phrases there and you should study——"

"I know one of them," thundered Jimmy, "and that's enough. "'I don't love you'—in the first line—that's enough. I can read that."

The doorbell rang jarringly.

Jimmy gave a farewell backward look, saw her brandishing another paper before his eyes, felt her hand upon his arm. But he jerked away angrily from those fingers he had so loved to touch, accidentally, of course, at their tasks.

"I'll read no more fool marks," he said.

"But this is a typed transcript of the fool marks, Jimmy," she explained. "I knew you were a fraud and prepared this for you," and suddenly her arm went about his stubborn neck, tightened, and brought his eyes down within range of the typewritten words:

"I don't love you half as much as I'm going to——"

"Jehoshaphat!" Jimmy waited to read no more, but blinking at the heavenly light that enveloped him, he kissed his teacher, and together they went to the door to let in the Shark.

GATHER FOR GREAT FESTIVAL

"Devil Dance" Is Important Occasion in Mongolia—Driving Out the Spirits of Evil.

The devil dance is one of the greatest festivals of the Lama church in Mongolia. It takes place each spring, and represents the chasing out of the spirits of evil. The dance is simply a series of posturings of men and boys in rich costumes, wearing fearsome animal masks, accompanied by an impressive chant.

The midsummer festival is also an interesting affair. It is a survival of the primitive nature cult, and attracts crowds of pilgrims. Caravans begin to arrive days in advance. The Living Buddha appears in his fringed orange felt helmet, the abbots in their fat lacquer hats, the lesser lamas in silk or brocade skull caps, and the lay officials in old Manchu hats, topped with colored buttons to denote their rank. The whole company rides out to the monastery gate before dawn to the obo or sacred mount. These are elevations crowned with piles of stones and decorated with prayer banners. They represent the ancient totems to the nature spirits.

The ceremony must be completed by sunrise, when all return to the monastery for a big feast. The ceremony at the obo is a riot of color. A weird service is held in which huge bronze trumpets, six feet long, flutes made from sea shells and libation cups from human skulls, are used.

A Better World.

Whenever we get the notion in our head that the world is no better and life no easier to live than it ever was all we have to do to cheer up again is to reflect back to the old days when house cleaning meant that we used to have to get down on our hands and knees and work the skin off both of them trying to stretch an old carpet back into the space it occupied before mother insisted on it being ripped up. Anyone who has ever laid a carpet in the old way will tell these smart young folks of today who complain about the chores they have to do that they know nothing whatever of the agonies of house cleaning. Incidentally the folks who beat the dust out of the rugs with a stick aren't so numerous as they used to be.—Detroit Free Press.

Not a Word.

There was nobody who could play the violin like Binks, at least, so he was delighted when asked to play at the local concert.

"The instrument I shall use at your concert," he explained to the host, "is over 200 years old."

"Oh, that's all right, old chap. Don't worry about that," replied the host. "I shan't tell and no one will ever know the difference."

To Be Pitied, Indeed.

"I pity poor Alice with such a commonplace husband."

"It must be awful. She says even the things he says in his sleep are dull and uninteresting."—Boston Transcript.

Says Jud Tunkins.

"Many a man," said Jud Tunkins, "inquires about the baseball score not because he's particularly interested, but because he wants to get his mind off the League of Nations."

We are still endeavoring to clear from all ambiguity the definition of "a well-educated man." The diversity is fine. The Edisonians contend that education is a collection of old books. The public, exercising a judicial prerogative, concludes that both facts and books have produced the conditions under which we now live, and that both must be in the boat we are paddling on the well-known tide of fortune.

Gamaliel himself couldn't raise a Shakespeare in a machine shop. Old Jonathan Edwards, reading Solomon to a little Edison, would end by banging the Proverbs upon a listless head. Not every philosopher is a "gentleman and a scholar." But the mould of every trained intellect must be fashioned by exigencies, colored with lore, shaped by the invisible hands of the dead, and susceptible to the external influences of the throbbing street.—Leslie's Weekly.

Lines to Be Remembered.

"I can forgive, but I cannot forget" is only another way of saying, "I will not forgive." A forgiveness ought to be like a canceled note, torn in two and burned up, so that it never can be shown against the debtor.—Henry Ward Beecher.

Way to Detect Forgery.

For decision of forgery and identification of handwriting it is best to turn the writing upside down, according to tests made by the psychology department of the University of Wisconsin at the Universal exposition, where 297 persons tested their ability to discover forgery. Ten signatures on two cards were submitted to visitors, and one of the ten was false. For discovering the false one, the inverted card was found most helpful. This condition is explained by the fact that for fine judgments it is best to pay attention only to the form of the writing.

Miniature Writing.

Marcel Mauvais sent to La Nature (Paris) an ordinary postcard on which he had written 23,154 words, with a total of 125,000 letters. It is legible even to the naked eye. The average book has about 300 words to the page, so this postcard represents about seventy-seven pages.

The Muse of Dancing.

The Muse Terpsichore was the inventress and patroness of the art of dancing as accessory to the singing or recitation of lyrical poetry. She is generally represented with the lyre and plectrum, crowned with flowers and in a mirthful attitude.

BUMPER SPUD CROP IN COUNTY

Biggest Revenue Producer In Pennington County This Year.

Final shipments are now being made of the county potato crop which is the biggest revenue producer in the county this year. About 1500 acres were in potatoes, and the total yield is something like 175,000 bushels. The Pennington County Produce Association has shipped over forty carloads of No. 1 potatoes to the Minnesota Potato Exchange which have netted shippers from $1.20 to $1.50 a bushel F. O. B. station of loading and there are still several thousands of bushels of high class seed stock stored in pits and cellars. Next year will see two if not three times more acreage in than there was this year.

RAIL STRIKE STILL PENDING

15 Per-cent Of All Railroad Employees Stand Firm To Strike.

No settlement has been reached between the railroads and railroad employees regarding the proposed strike scheduled for October 31st. Maintenance of way, station men, car repairmen and other kindred orders outside the Big Four brotherhoods and telegraphers, have voted to remain at work. Enginemen, conductors and telegraphers, who number about fifteen per cent of all railroad employees, are standing firm to strike unless their demands are met. A twelve per cent cut in rates has been ordered by the U. S. Railway Board to offset the wage reductions which has caused the present controversy among the men.

Shot To Death

A son of the late Joe Blair, former chief of police at Red Lake Falls was shot to death in his soft drink emporium at Minneapolis by a moonshine crazed transient last week. The man entered the place and demanded liquor, and when Mr. Blair was unable to comply with his demand, he pulled a gun and shot with the result above stated. The body was shipped to Red Lake where funeral services were held Monday.

Old Home Town Paper

Willis E. Johnson, president of the South Dakota State College at Brookings, appreciates the country weekly. He says:

"The country weekly doesn't attempt to fill the place of a daily, but has a distinctive field of its own. It serves the local community, and the local community sometimes has a wide horizon. It always includes a large rural constituency. The country weekly recognizes that the farmers are by far its most important subscribers as they are the people whose patronage makes the town possible. For this reason the home town papers are giving more and more agricultural information and other genuine service to the farmers of the state. They are thus one of the invaluable links in the chain of social and economic strength which makes for true progress."

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of Four Hundred Fifty-seven and 33-100 ($457 33) Dollars, which is claimed to be due and is due at the date of this notice upon a certain Mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Peter William Korstad and Blanche Korstad, his wife Mortgagors, to C. L. Hansen Mortgagee, bearing date the 17th. day of March 1919, and with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Pennington and State of Minnesota, on the 18th. day of March 1919, at 8:30 o'clock A. M., in Book 61 of Mortgages, on page 19, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said Mortgage or any part thereof.

Now, Therefore, Notice is Hereby Given, That by virtue of the power of sale contained in said Mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said Mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said Mortgage, viz:

The Southwest Quarter (SW¼) of Section numbered Twenty-two (22), in Township numbered One hundred-fifty-three (153) North of Range numbered Forty (40), West of the 5th. P. M. in Pennington County and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Pennington County at the front door of the Court House in the city of Thief River Falls in said County and State, on the third day of December 1921, at One o'clock P. M., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of Four-hundred-fifty-seven & 33-100 Dollars, and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five Dollars, Attorney's fees, as stipulated in and by said Mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

LOST 36 HOURS IN WOODS

Young Girl Turns Up at New Jersey Farm After Night in Woods.

Lakewood, N. J.—Elsie Wolke, eighteen years old, daughter of Karl Wolke, occupant of a small bungalow on the edge of the dense woods here, was returned to her parents after she had stayed for 36 hours in the woods. Searching parties of farmers and police, aided by ten dogs, scoured the woods for the girl, but were unable to find her.

Some time later she entered the home of Morris Kapaloff, a farmer two miles from here on the road to Tom's River. Her clothes were torn and her face and arms scratched from brambles. She was unable to tell her name, but said the family letter box was 87 on the rural free-delivery route.

Kapaloff learned from the girl that she had slept during the night in a cemetery in the woods, where two parties of searchers had converged during the hunt. She was taken to her home.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE

Notice is hereby given that default has been made in the conditions of that certain mortgage duly executed and delivered by Sam B. Swanson and Carline Swanson, his wife, mortgagors, to Merchants State Bank of Red Lake Falls, a corporation, mortgagee, bearing date of November 17th, 1915, with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of the County of Pennington, State of Minnesota on the 2nd day of December, 1915 at 8:00 o'clock A.M., in Book 2 of Mortgages on page 627; which said mortgage together with the debt secured thereby was duly assigned by said Merchants State Bank of Red Lake Falls, mortgagee, to Northwestern Trust Company, Trustee under the last Will and Testament of William Delaney, Decedent, by written assignment dated January 28th 1916., and recorded in the office of said Register of Deeds on January 31st. 1916, at 8:00 o,clock A. M., in Book 56 of Mortgages on page 64; which default has continued to the date of this notice by the failure and neglect of said mortgagors to make payment of the sum of $1477.00 principal and interest by said Mortgage secured, which by its terms became due and payable on November 17th. 1920. And whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice under the terms and conditions of said mortgage the sum of $1400.00 with interest thereon at five and one-half percent (5½%) per annum since November 17th. 1920, and the further sum of $77.00 interest coupon by said mortgage secured with interest thereon at five and one-half per cent (5½%) per annum since November 17th. 1920, and the further sum of $319.69 taxes paid by the undersigned on September 10th. 1921, and interest thereon at the rate of six per cent per annum since September 10th. 1921, being a total due at date of this notice of One thousand eight hundred sixty-eight dollars and forty-four cents ($1868.44); and whereas the power of sale has become operative and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise has been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof. Now therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute, in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage to-wit: South half (S½) of Northwest quarter (NW¼) and Lots Three (3) Four (4) of Section Five (5) in Township One hundred fifty-two (152) North of Range Forty (40) West of the 5th principal meridian, in Pennington County, State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Pennington County at the front door of the Courthouse in the City of Thief River Falls, in said county and state, on the 21st day of November, 1921, at 10:00 o'clock A. M., at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash to pay said debt of $1868.44 and interest from date of this notice, and taxes paid and to be paid if any on said premises, and Fifty dollars ($50.00) attorneys fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from date of sale as provided by law.

Lots of Elderberry Wine; Pies and Jams Scarce

Harrisburg, Pa.—Elderberry pie and elderberry jam will be scarce in Pennsylvania next winter, according to reports received by state agriculture officials from farmers, but there will be no dearth of elderberry wine.

City wine makers in automobiles are robbing the elder bushes of their blossoms to make wine, the farmers complain.

With short strawberry and raspberry crops as a result of the drought, farmers were laying great store by their elderberry crop, but the other drought caused by national prohibition bids fair to make the elderberry crop short.

PAJAMAS "NOBBY" ON STREET

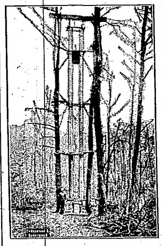
Russ Officer's Garb Leads to Distribution of Garments to Refugees.

Constantinople, Turkey.—American Red Cross and army pajamas are being converted into jaunty street clothes here by ingenious Russian refugee soldiers and civilians.

Hugh S. Bird, treasurer of the Red Cross, when here on a visit of inspection, saw a spick-and-span monocled Russian officer flourishing a cane and fanning himself with a straw hat at the local Red Cross offices. He noticed that the man had taken a suit of pajamas, sewed shoulder strap braid on them, strapped his officer's belt about them and rolled up the bottoms to give a trouser effect.

Mr. Bird thought so well of the ingenuity of the man, who had defeated the hot weather, that he gave orders for several thousand more pajamas to be distributed, so no Russian need wear his heavy, shabby winter clothes.

TESTING DEPTH BOMB.



Our crack yankee tars of the Pacific fleet have found a new method of experimenting with depth bombs. In a forest near Tacoma, a contrivance, pictured here, has been constructed. It is built after the fashion of a pile driver. A test bomb is placed directly beneath the weight at the top of the grooved slide, and the weight is permitted to drop naturally. It has been found that the velocity attained by dropping from different heights gives to the weight a pressure equal to that of the water at corresponding depths. The result is that data is secured so that at sea explosions can be timed accurately, thus preventing premature explosions which might injure the ship carrying the bombs and fail to destroy enemy craft.

William Cullen Bryant's "Thanatopsis" was first published in the North American Review in 1816. The title, from the Greek, signifies "a view of death." The poem, written when Bryant was but nineteen, is in blank verse, and is considered by many the most impressive of his works.

'A certain fair gardener set out on a windy day and sowed petunia seeds in great abundance in one of her garden beds. (Any one who has dealt lately in petunia seeds will remember that they are almost microscopic.) She patted her rows firmly and sighed with satisfaction as she thought of how the petunia would look.

BOY BURNS UP MOTORBOAT

Heard Mother Objecting to Father Taking Ride in Craft, So He Destroyed It.

Philadelphia.—The mystery of the burning of the powerboat Susan G. at Camden has been cleared up by the confession of Ernest Gries, Jr., seventeen years old.

The youth told the police he burned the boat to please his mother. He told of lying on the lounge in the sitting room of his home while his mother and father were arguing over a trip the father wanted to take on the craft with a boat club over the holiday. Mrs. Gries did not want her husband to go.

The boy said he told his mother he would burn the boat, and so, early in the morning he went aboard in his canoe, soaked everything with gasoline from the tank, set it on fire and was blown overboard. He swam ashore, he said, and went to bed.

Monoplane Invented by Italian Engineer Said to Need Little Landing Space.

Rome, Italy.—An airplane capable of landing without the need of a large aviation field, able to travel more than 300 miles an hour and, if necessary, to meander along at only a few miles an hour is announced as the invention of an Italian engineer, Epaminonda Bertucci of Rome.

The inventor reports that he has already tried out the machine on a small scale and regards his first experiments as indicative of the success of the invention. The new machine is primarily intended for aerial war chasing and is to be armed with a machine gun. It is a monoplane.

Just Punishment.

The cunning of the infantile was illustrated the other day when a 3-year-old who had been informed that when he was a bad boy a little bird told his father, and if the little bird did not happen to be around, by the flies around the house, which acted as the bird's agent, triumphantly brought two dead flies to his mother. "I tilled two agents!" he cried with much pride. "Now they dassent tell daddy on me!"—New York Evening Post.

Cut Down Gas Bills.

Comparatively few people realize that the gas bills may be cut down materially by exercising care in lighting the gas. Hold a lighted match over the burner, then very slowly turn on the gas. If the gas is turned on full force before the match is applied, a slight explosion occurs which affects the meter and sends it forward rapidly.

A Great Heap of Small Sticks.

Grammar being but an introduction to the understanding of authors, if it be made too long or exquisite to the learner, it in a manner mortifieth his courage. And by the time he cometh to the most sweet and pleasant reading of old authors, the spark of fervent desire of learning is extinct with the burden of grammar like as a little fire is soon quenched with a great heap of small sticks; so that it can never come to the principal logs where it should long burn in a great pleasant fire.—Sir Thomas Elyot, "The Governor" (1531).

Presidents Who Served Two Terms.

The first president to serve eight years was Jefferson, who was followed in turn by Madison and Monroe, eight years each. Then came John Quincy Adams, who had one term only. He was followed by Jackson with two full terms, ending in 1837. Then came a break of 40 years, until 1877, before President Grant retired after eight years' occupancy of the White House. Cleveland served eight years, 1885-89 and 1893-97, but his two terms were interrupted by that of Benjamin Harrison, 1889-93.

"Dips" Robbed of Haven When Art Center Moves

London. — Burlington House, the present home of the Royal Academy exhibition, does not seem to afford such a fine harvest for pickpockets as the great room at Somerset House, where exhibitions were held until 1837, remarks the London Morning Post. A wooden dado ran round the room, and when after the academy resigned possession, this was removed in the course of renovations, the narrow space between it and the brickwork was found to be stuffed with innumerable purses, ancient and modern—an eloquent testimony to successful pocketpicking and cleverness in disposing of recognizable property.

SEEMS A MYSTICAL NUMBER

In All Known Ages, "Seven" Has for Some Reason Had a Peculiar Significance.

It seems that the number seven has always had some peculiar significance. On the seventh day of the seventh month a holy observance was ordained to the children of Israel, who feasted seven days and remained seven days in tents. The seventh day was supposed to be a Sabbath, or rest for all, and at the end of seven times seven there was to be a jubilee. Jacob served seven years to win Rachel for his wife. Noah had seven days' warning of the flood. Nebuchadnezzar lived seven years as a beast. The Savior spoke seven times from the cross on which he hung seven hours. In Scripture there are seven resurrections mentioned. In the Lord's prayer there are seven petitions. There are seven mysteries of the apocalypse revealed in the seven churches in Asia. In Revelation there is described seven lambs before the seven spirits of God, seven golden candlesticks, a book with seven seals, seven angels with seven trumpets, seven prayers, seven vials of wrath, seven kings, seven thunders and a dragon with seven heads.—Chicago Journal.

COMMON VS. SELECT.

Bishop Homer Stunz said at a dinner in Omaha:

"If we were all as ambitious to progress ethically as our war profiteers are to progress socially, it would be a very good thing.

"A war profiteer decided recently to drop the Baptist faith and turn Episcopalian, as all the bang-up people in town went to the Episcopal church.

"So he visited a book store and asked for the hymnals, Bibles and so forth that he would need in his new way of worship.

"He seemed well enough pleased with the volumes that the salesman laid before him till he came to the book of Common Prayer. Over this he frowned and shook his head.

"'This'll hardly do,' he said, and he tapped the title with his forefinger. 'Let's have something a little more selecter, bo.'"

FIRE DESTROYS NEW HOME

A fire which originated from unknown cause in the basement of Will Hartje's new bungalow at south end of Minnesota Avenue, completely destroyed the house with all contents early Tuesday morning. Mr. Hartje, who had attended a party at Thief River that evening, arrived home after midnight, built a fire in the kitchen stove, and was about to retire when he discovered the basement to be afire. He roused the Kolp family who phoned in an alarm. When the department arrived the fire had gained such headway that the chemical seemingly had no effect, and there being no water supply in that neighborhood, the house was soon a mass of flames and burned down to the foundation.

Loss on the building is partially covered by insurance, but the contents, which were nearly all new, are a total loss. Mr. Hartje has signified his intention of rebuilding on the same site this fall if weather is favorable, otherwise, not until spring.

Agency Saves Money

The Co-operative livestock agency established at St. Paul by Minnesota producers a short time ago, has already saved the farmers in actual cash, more than the total amount they invested in its capital stock, says the Minnesota Farm Bureau report. The agency has handled the largest business done by any firm on the market, at an operating cost at least $15,000 less than the farmers would have had to pay for an equal volume of business without the co-operative agency.

The railroad strike about which columns have been written the past few weeks, has fallen thru. Large number of unemployed in the country and a general desire on part of producers for lower rates, had some bearing in asisting the railroad employees to arrive at their decision not to strike.

While on the road home from Thief River last Friday evening, Charley Swanson, driving his Overland, collided with a Ford car driven by a party from Mentor. Both cars were damaged to a considerable extent, but neither driver was hurt.

Mesdames E. O. Mogenson, H. O. Loken and Miss Smith of Thief River, visited with friends here Monday afternoon last.

Pure bred sheep and hogs, and about 50 grade milch cows are desired. Cows should be "springers" from 4 to 9 years old for which there is good demand. To bring best price, cows should be in good condition and have evidence of being good milkers Farmers who desire to consign should write O. M. Kiser, Sec'ty. of R. R. V. L. S. Ass'n., Crookston, giving number, age, breed and date of calving.

Bodies Not Found

There appears no doubt now but that John Steen and Garfield Franson lost their lives in Lake of the Woods by drowning. Friends had hopes that they might have reached shore and were lost in the wilds near the lake, but since over two weeks have elapsed since the occurance, all hope has been abandoned. "Fisherman John," famous for his skill in locating drowned persons, is at Warroad searching for the bodies.

Ripe Strawberries

A Twin City paper commented last week upon the fact that a resident down there had picked ripe strawberries in his garden. Different state papers have since come forward to state that berries were to be found in different degrees of ripeness in their communities.

Mike Fricker of this village, has large, fully ripe berries in sufficient quantity for his own use every day. Not only that, but his plants have been bearing since the first of May and he expect them to continue bearing until the ground is frozen These berries are fully as large as any picked during the summer months, and they have the same delicious flavor.

Auction Sale

The Dorcas Society of the Nor. Lutheran church will have an auction of fancy articles, etc., at the Imperial Hall Thursday evening, November 10th. Lunch will be served after the sale. This is an opportunity to buy articles that would make suitable Christmas presents. All welcome.

FREIGHT RATE IS LOWERED

Organized farmers have won a victory in their fight for lower railroad rates, the Farm Bureau federation says in a report prepared to inform its members that the Interstate Commerce Commission has ordered sweeping reductions in rates on wheat, coarse grains and hay. The rate slash came just after the Bureau took legal action to force reductions, by filing a formal petition with the Commission asking successive cuts be ordered until the rate increase of 1920 has been wiped out.

Barn Burned

The barn on Ed Timm's farm five miles north of this place, together with a considerable amount of hay and other property stored in it, was burned to the ground Monday shortly after noon. Insurance to cover about one third the amount of loss was carried in the Bray Mutual Fire Insurance Co.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of Four Hundred Fifty-seven and 33-100 ($457.33) Dollars, which is claimed to be due and is due at the date of this notice upon a certain Mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Peter William Korstad and Blanche Korstad, his wife Mortgagors, to C. L. Hansen Mortgagee, bearing date the 17th. day of March 1919, and with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Pennington and State of Minnesota, on the 18th. day of March 1919, at 8:30 o'clock A. M., in Book 61 of Mortgages, on page 19, and no action or proceeding having been institued, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said Mortgage or any part thereof.

Now, Therefore, Notice is Hereby Given, That by virtue of the power of sale contained in said Mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said Mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises descibed in and conveyed by said Mortgage, viz:

The Southwest Quarter (SW¼) of Section numbered Twenty-two (22), in Township numbered One hundred-fifty-three (153) North of Range numbered Forty (40), West of the 5th. P. M. in Pennington County and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Pennington County at the front door of the Court House in the city of Thief River Falls in said County and State, on the third day of December 1921, at One o'clock P. M., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of Four-hundred-fifty-seven & 33-100 Dollars, and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five Dollars, Attorney's fees, as stipulated in and by said Mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Cause of Earth's Fragrance.

The real cause of the peculiar fragrance of the earth, which is noticeable especially in the spring and after rains, has been found by recent experimenters. It was formerly explained as a result of certain chemical decompositions, but has now been discovered to be the emanation of thread bacteria, of which two species are particularly odorous. Not only do the bacteria isolated from the soil have the earth fragrance, but they retain it when cultivated on very varied substances, even on such inorganic materials as pea soup, milk, glycerine and starch paste.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE

Notice is hereby given that default has been made in the conditions of that certain mortgage duly executed and delivered by Sam B. Swanson and Carline Swanson, his wife, mortgagors, to Merchants State Bank of Red Lake Falls, a corporation, mortgagee, bearing date of November 17th. 1915, with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of the County of Pennington, State of Minnesota on the 2nd day of December, 1915. at 8:00 o'clock A. M., in Book 2 of Mortgages on page 627; which said mortgage together with the debt secured thereby was duly assigned by said Merchants State Bank of Red Lake Falls, mortgagee, to Northwestern Trust Company, Trustee under the last Will and Testament of William Delaney, Decedent, by written assignment dated January 28th. 1916., and recorded in the office of said Register of Deeds on January 31st., 1916, at 8:00 o,clock A. M., in Book 56 of Mortgages on page 64; which default has continued to the date of this notice by the failure and neglect of said mortgagors to make payment of the sum of $1477.00 principal and interest by said Mortgage secured, which by its terms became due and payable on November 17th. 1920. And whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice under the terms and conditions of said mortgage the sum of $1400.00 with interest thereon at five and one-half percent (5½%) per annum since November 17th, 1920, and the further sum of $77.00 interest coupon by said mortgage secured with interest thereon at five and one-half per cent (5½%) per annum since November 17th. 1920, and the further sum of $319.69 taxes paid by the undersigned on September 10th. 1921, and interest thereon at the rate of six per cent per annum since September 10th. 1921, being a total due at date of this notice of One thousand eight hundred sixty-eight dollars and forty-four cents ($1868.44); and whereas the power of sale has become operative and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise has been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof. Now therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage to-wit: South half (S½) of Northwest quarter (NW¼) and Lots Three (3) Four (4) of Section Five (5) in Township One hundred fifty-two (152) North of Range Forty (40) West of the 5th principal meridian, in Pennington County, State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Pennington County at the front door of the Courthouse in the City of Thief River Falls, in said county and state, on the 21st day of November, 1921, at 10:00 o'clock A. M., at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash to pay said debt of $1868.44 and interest from date of this notice, and taxes paid and to be paid if any on said premises, and Fifty dollars ($50.00) attorneys fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from date of sale as provided by law.

The Infatuation of Dacey

By MURIEL BLAIR

(©, 1921, Western Newspaper Union.)

Wherever he looked, whether at a lovely sunset scene or some radiant picture, he saw a sheen of gold red hair, a cheek the hue of a rose leaf and eyes as tender as the softest moonlight. It affected the heart like enchanted music. The hushed dreams of youth were awakened and his pulse bounded at the alarm.

He sat now—he, Norman Dacey—young, rich in money but dissatisfied of soul, telling the story of it all to his closest friend, Elliott Hughes. As he spoke his subdued tones reminded of a poet traversing some sweet and tender lay, for into his barren life had come a purpose—to find one woman he had seen and to tell her that he loved her.

"Two months," he was saying, "and it seems like two years. It was just beyond the village that the team took fright at a passing automobile. I was thrown out. It was the gash from a deep cut that was the most serious. I was stunned. Then between that and the hospital there was one supreme moment. It was when I saw her."

"You have told that, Dacey," broke in Hughes in a tone of slight raillery. "She was lovely as an houri and all that."

"She was simply a girl, an innocent, beautiful girl," resented Dacey gravely. "A man stood at a little distance, probably a relative. She had torn a scarf from her throat and was trying to staunch the blood from my wound. I recall one look into those pitying soul-like eyes. Then the blackness of death again.

"And nothing of the girl since?" questioned Hughes.

"Nothing," replied Dacey.

"Well, I am at least glad to see your mind roused out of the torpor of your habitual ennui, Hughes. If you can take any interest in pursuing this extravagant phantom, keep it up. Let me see, though—I believe you told me that the accident was costly to you in more ways than one?"

"You mean the trifle I lost?" observed Dacey.

"You call five hundred dollars in money a trifle!"

"The money does not trouble me," replied Dacey carelessly. "I may have lost it before the accident."

The friends separated, Hughes to go home to his wife to smile over "the ridiculous infatuation of Dacey," the latter to still more determinedly seek some trace of the mysterious unknown whose bonny face was with him everywhere.

After that he spent days and then weeks in a constant effort to trace down the being he could not dismiss from his thoughts. And then one chill blustering November night, as he sat in the library of his lonely home, he saw a forlorn form appear before the casement and falter there. He saw a wan, agitated face and dripping, storm-beaten garments. In an instant he had drawn open the window, and she, the lady of his dreams, tottered into the room and fell to the nearest chair, where she drooped like a wilted flower.

She raised her eyes at last to murmur his name, to draw from her bosom—the pocketbook he had lost.

"You are Mr. Dacey," she faltered. "This is yours, I must go."

"No! No!" cried Dacey, blocking the way. Then he saw her reel with a terrified cry. The windows behind Dacey opened and a rough-looking man intruded—the man he had seen once before with the girl.

"Ah, I have found you, have I, Gloria?" hissed the intruder. "You had that all of the time."

The speaker made a dive for the pocketbook. Dacey put out his strong arm.

"Do not harm him," pleaded the girl piteously. "He has kept me a prisoner, he has nearly starved me because I would not give up the pocketbook which I wrenched from him. But he is my brother—and it was all his cruel lust for gold."

"Take it and—go," said Dacey to the brother.

With a gloating cry of joy the man sped from the room, holding the coveted money to his breast like a wild beast clasping its prey. Dacey reclosed the windows, pressed a button in the wall and told the servant who answered to summon his widowed sister.

"Sit down, please," spoke Dacey, as wondering Leah Davelin entered the room. "I have a story to tell."

How sweetly soft he told it! How the sympathetic tears came to his loving sister, how the eyes of the breathless, marveling Gloria Burley seemed to take it all in as if it were some beautiful dream.

Abruptly Dacey left the room, the woman he loved in the friendly charge of his sister. It was a new Gloria, revived, whom he met the next day—the happy day, the day of his life immemorial that he asked her to become his wife.

CHEAP COOP FOR BACK YARD

Inexpensive House Will Prove Entirely Satisfactory Where Small Flock Is Kept.

It is not necessary to spend much money for housing if you are going to keep a small flock of hens in your back yard. Indeed, it is unwise, say poultry specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture. One or two piano cases or a large packing box may often be made into an acceptable home. But whatever you build should be made dry and free from drafts, and have good ventilation. The United States Department of Agriculture has numerous bulletins giving directions for this kind of construction, and any of these are available for the asking, or for a very few cents where a charge is necessary. A card to the division of publications, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., will get you what you need.

EGGS PRESERVED WITH LIME

Will Be Found Quite Satisfactory Where Water Glass Is Difficult to Obtain.

If water glass is not obtainable, lime may be used for preserving eggs, say specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture. It is not considered so good as water glass, as in some instances eggs preserved by this method have tasted slightly of lime, although at other times limewater has proved entirely sastifactory.

To preserve with lime, dissolve two pounds of unslaked lime in a small quantity of water, and dilute with five gallons of water that has previously been boiled and cooled. Allow the mixture to stand until the lime settles, then pour off and use the clear liquid. Place clean, fresh eggs in a clean earthenware crock or jar, and pour the clear limewater into the vessel until the eggs are covered. At least two inches of the solution should cover the top layer of eggs.

Had Feeling for Daddy.

Maxine was visiting a friend. Her mother told her to return home at four o'clock, and when the time arrived she put away her playthings and prepared to leave. Her friend urged her to play just a little longer, but seriously she replied: "No, Molly, I can't play any longer, for if my daddy comes home from work and I'm gone he will cry his blue eyes out."

Odd Assam Marriage Custom.

One of the strangest of marriage customs is that observed by some of the women of Assam. There the bride sometimes takes the initiative. She goes to fetch the bridegroom, and it is etiquette for him to hide and resist until carried off. Women of means are permitted to choose a temporary husband, and, when tired of him, pay him off and take another.

Baby's Play Pen.

Have an open lattice work made, or a paling, about 20 inches high, and 10 to 12 feet long. By using hinges it can be folded up out of the way when not needed. Put a rug on the floor, a clean sheet over the rug, and the wooden wall around it, and the baby will be safe and happy inside.

LOST 36 HOURS IN WOODS

Young Girl Turns Up at New Jersey Farm After Night in Woods.

Lakewood, N. J.—Elsie Wolke, eighteen years old, daughter of Karl Wolke, occupant of a small bungalow on the edge of the dense woods here, was returned to her parents after she had stayed for 36 hours in the woods. Searching parties of farmers and police, aided by ten dogs, scoured the woods for the girl, but were unable to find her.

Some time later she entered the home of Morris Kapaloff, a farmer, two miles from here on the road to Tom's River. Her clothes were torn and her face and arms scratched from brambles. She was unable to tell her name, but said the family letter box was 87 on the rural free-delivery route.

Kapaloff learned from the girl that she had slept during the night in a cemetery in the woods, where two parties of searchers had converged during the hunt. She was taken to her home.

COSTUME WAS NOT COMPLETE

Clarence Felt Napoleon Could Not Be Properly Depicted Without Those "Scrubbing Brushes."

The children in the nursery were playing and Clarence had taken upon himself the task of representing Napoleon, a picture of whom he had encountered in an illustrated volume belonging to his father.

At the urgent request of Clarence, mother provided him with a paper hat, to which he added a plume forcibly taken from a neighbor's chicken. He then provided himself with a belt belonging to father and devised a serviceable sword of wood. After consulting the portrait of Napoleon for the last time, he discovered that something was wanting in his own make-up.

Mother, however, thought that he "looked all right," to which Clarence took exception, saying:

"No, mother, I'm not complete. I ought to have a couple of scrubbing brushes for my shoulders."—Philadelphia Ledger.

FARM POULTRY

ARRANGEMENT OF DUCK FARM

Should Be Located on Light, Sandy Soil, With Convenient Facilities for Watering.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Duck farms are usually located on light, sandy soil, preferably on sloping land, where the droppings will leach freely into the soil, so that the land keeps sweet and clean. The farm should have good shipping facilities to aid both in shipping products and in buying supplies. The arrangement of the buildings should be planned to economize labor and allow for future increase of the equipment.

Young Green Ducks, Ready for Market.

The incubator cellar should be convenient to the brooder house, the brooder house to the growing house and pens, and these buildings to the killing house. The pens in the houses, the outside yards, and the arrangement of the buildings should be planned so that the ducks may be easily driven from house to house as desired. The feed room or house should be centrally located.

Convenient watering arrangements are essential where large numbers of ducks are kept, as they require a large amount of drinking water, say poultry specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture. While ducks may be kept successfully under very intensive conditions, it is advisable to allow considerable yard space. Double yards, which may be rotated and planted to quick-growing crops, such as oats, wheat and rye, are good for intensive duck farms.

It is advisable to have a pond or stream for the breeding ducks, as they usually give better fertility under these conditions, although on some successful duck farms the ducks are always kept on dry land. The young green ducks on some farms which have a pond are not allowed to go into the water except to bathe and clean their feathers just before marketing. Other growers, however, allow the green ducks free access to ponds or streams until they are marketed.

It Would Seem So.

WILL HONOR UNKNOWN HERO

To Be Buried In Arlington National Cemetery Friday.

The body of an unknown United States soldier, disintered from where he fell while fighting for his country on the battlefield in France, has arrived in this country and will be re-intered in the Arlington National Cemetery Friday this week. England and France have both honored an unknown hero with similar ceremonies, and representatives from those two countries, as well as from all others who fought with the Allies during the World War will be present at the final ceremonies for the unknown Doughboy tomorrow.

President Harding's address at the graveside will be transmitted by telephone to a number of cities in the East and central United States by an ingenious instrument recently perfected by the Bell Telephone Company, whereby his voice will be clearly heard at gatherings held at the same hour as the ceremonies at Arlington.

Opening Date Changed

Opening of the Northwestern Auto School at Thief River Falls scheduled for the first of this month, has been postponed until the 15th owing to new equipment and material not arriving on time. The school will be ready to give thorough and comprehensive training in auto and gas engine mechaincs commencing on the opening day as now announced.

Dinner And Sale

The Ladies' Aid of the Swedish Lutheran church will serve a chicken dinner in rooms over the Nelson store on Friday, Nov. 18. Serving will start at noon. A sale of fancy articles, etc, will take place at the same room after dinner is served.

Misses Helga and Amanda Kalland, who have ben employed at Baudette, returned home Tuesday for a short stay.

Walter Corbett has moved from the farm west of town to Thief River where he has opened a meat market near the bridge next to the old saw mill site.

Observe Holiday

The local school, in common with all schools in the state, will be closed Friday, Armistice Day, the third anniversary of the ending of the World War. While no special exercises or observances will be held here, many towns in this part of the state will put on celebrations similar to those usually held July Fourth.

ASK FOR BIDS FOR ROAD WORK

A call for bids on trunk highway improvement in 27 widely distributed sections is now being made by the Minnesota Highway deparment. Special team work is to be ordered to help settlers and farmers in some districts, and the jobs mentioned above are selected to spread employment and road benefits as far as possible. The 27 jobs on which bids are called for now, will cost $1,687,000, and are all gravelling work save one instance of 25 miles of pavement.

The present plan of the department is to use about $4,500,000 on winter road work the coming winter.

Lands State Position

Miss Inez Patterson who for the past year has acted as field agent for the State Home for Girls at Sauk Center, has lately received appointment as District Representative for the Children's Bureau of the State Board of Control. Miss Patterson will have an office at St. Paul and her duties will be among neglected and dependent children whose welfare is in charge of the Board of Control.

Numerous St. Hilaire people rejoice with her over her good fortune; which comes as a well merited promotion.

Cafe Opens

After a week spent in refinishing fixtures and interior of the building, Mrs. Mary Kinney is again engaged in the cafe business and is ready to serve all comers. The rooms on second floor were all redecorated during the summer so the place now presents a very attractive appearance.

Anton, son of Mr. and Mrs. Johan Johnson of Rocksbury, is reported to be ill with an attack of inflammatory rheumatism and is confined to his bed.

Mrs. Joe Patton left last week to spend a month with relatives and friends in Kansas. She went from here to Clay Center where she will spend some time after which she will visit her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Edw. Carlson who live on a farm near Morganville, Kan.

BOND VALUES ON INCREASE

Liberty Bonds of all issues which have sold at various discounts, some as low as 15 percent, have taken an upward trend lately an are now being marketed at 95 and better. This, together with an announcement of a slash in rediscount rates by the Federal Reserve Bank, effective at once, is believed to be an indication of a general loosening up of the money market and consequent better times.

RED CROSS ROLL CALL

Two Weeks, Nov. 11-24, Set Aside For Purpose Of Enrollment.

Red Cross chapters thruout the entire country have set aside two weeks, Nov. 11-12, for annual Red Cross Roll Call. Every member in good standing, all ex-members, and in fact every person in the country interested in any of the dozen different charitable projects conducted by the Red Cross, are invited to take part in a great membership drive. Relief for starving children in Europe and Asia, assistance to ex-service men and their families in this country, the U. S. Public Health service, child health program, disaster relief and other activities depend for existance on voluntary contributions and by sales of memberships in the Red Cross. Your dollar paid Nov. 11-24 will determine how much the Red Cross can spend for each of the commendable undertakings named above. Get your card from members of the local chapter.

Contrary To Facts

The Times at Thief River had an article last week about the Hartje fire here in which they stated the local fire department did not respond to the alarm thinking it a Hallowe'en joke, and that the house burned without any attempt being made to save it. The truth of the matter is somewhat different in that the department was on the scene within fifteen minutes after the call, and they did everything possible to check the flames for which credit is due them.

Big Game Season

Opening of the big game season in this state will be today. Hundreds of hunters have already gone into the woods and many more will be on the grounds before the end of this week. The license fee this year is $2 25 instead of the old rate.

A light snow fell here Saturday morning but it melted about as fast as it fell. A three inch fall is reported from towns near the border.

Due to heavy losses and expenses and reduced premium income, insurance institutions are under considerable strain at this time. The strong ones are not seriously affected, but many lightweight concerns which have been unwisely managed have already succumbed, and prevailing opinion is that others of that class have trouble ahead. Under these conditions it is wise for business men to go over their insurance policies, consider the standing of the institutions which issued them and if there is any doubt about them have the insurance replaced in thoroughly strong companies.

—Journal of Commerce, New York, Oct. 18, 1921.

We are pleased to announce that we write insurance for the largest and strongest company in the United States.

W. C. Hartje's residence, recently totally destroyed by fire, was covered with a policy in the largest and strongest company in existence.

Why not carry a policy in the best when it costs no more than others?

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of Four Hundred Fifty-seven and 33-100 ($457.83) Dollars, which is claimed to be due and is due at the date of this notice upon a certain Mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Peter William Korstad and Blanche Korstad, his wife Mortgagors, to C. L. Hansen Mortgagee, bearing date the 17th. day of March 1919, and with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Pennington and State of Minnesota, on the 18th. day of March 1919, at 8:30 o'clock A. M., in Book 61 of Mortgages, on page 19, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said Mortgage or any part thereof.

Now, Therefore, Notice is Hereby Given, That by virtue of the power of sale contained in said Mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said Mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises descibed ,in and conveyed by said Mortgage, viz:

The Southwest Quarter (SW¼) of Section numbered Twenty-two (22), in Township numbered One hundred-fifty-three (153) North of Range numbered Forty (40), West of the 5th. P. M. in Pennington County and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Pennington County at the front door of the Court House in the city of Thief River Falls in said County and State, on the third day of December 1921, at One o'clock P. M., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of Four-hundred-fifty-seven & 33-100 Dollars, and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five Dollars, Attorney's fees, as stipulated in and by said Mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated October 12th. A.D. 1921.

Vanishing Languages.

Nowhere in America has there been such a diversity of Indian languages as in California. But these languages are now rapidly disappearing. Several of them are known only by five or six, and others only by twenty or thirty living persons, and hardly a year passes without some dialect, or even language, ceasing to exist through the death of the last individual able to speak it. Efforts are being made to record all these languages for the sake of the light they throw on the ancient history of the Pacific coast.—Washington Star.

Chinook Language.

The Chinook language is a jargon of Indian, French, English and other words, named after the Chinook Indians of the Columbia river in the state of Washington and in British Columbia. It was once much used by traders and Indians in that region, but is now nearly abandoned. It is on record that toads and small fish have fallen from the clouds. Such occurences have been explained by the supposition that the objects were taken up in violent whirlwinds and, perhaps, transported a considerable distance before they were dropped to the earth.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE

Notice is hereby given that default has been made in the conditions of that certain mortgage duly executed and delivered by Sam B. Swanson and Carline Swanson, his wife, mortgagors, to Merchants State Bank of Red Lake Falls, a corporation, mortgagee, bearing date of November 17th. 1915, with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of the County of Pennington, State of Minnesota on the 2nd day of December, 1915, at 8:00 o'clock A.M., in Book 2 of Mortgages on page 627; which said mortgage together with the debt secured thereby was duly assigned by said Merchants State Bank of Red Lake Falls, mortgagee, to Northwestern Trust Company, Trustee under the last Will and Testament of William Delaney, Decedent, by written assignment dated January 28th 1916., and recorded in the office of said Register of Deeds on January 31st., 1916, at 8:00 o'clock A. M., in Book 56 of Mortgages on page 64; which default has continued to the date of this notice by the failure and neglect of said mortgagors to make payment of the sum of $1477.00 principal and interest by said Mortgage secured, which by its terms became due and payable on November 17th. 1920. And whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice under the terms and conditions of said mortgage the sum of $1400.00 with interest thereon at five and one-half percent (5½%) per annum since November 17th. 1920, and the further sum of $77.00 interest coupon by said mortgage secured with interest thereon at five and one-half per cent (5½%) per annum since November 17th. 1920, and the further sum of $319.69 taxes paid by the undersigned on September 10th. 1921, and interest thereon at the rate of six per cent per annum since September 10th. 1921, being a total due at date of this notice of One thousand eight hundred sixty-eight dollars and forty-four cents ($1868.44); and whereas the power of sale has become operative and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise has been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof. Now therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage to-wit: South half (S½) of Northwest quarter (NW¼) and Lots Three (3) Four (4) of Section Five (5) in Township One hundred fifty-two (152) North of Range Forty (40) West of the 5th principal meridian, in Pennington County, State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Pennington County at the front door of the Courthouse in the City of Thief River Falls, in said county and state, on the 21st day of November, 1921, at 10:00 o'clock A. M., at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash to pay said debt of $1868.44 and interest from date of this notice, and taxes paid and to be paid if any on said premises, and Fifty dollars ($50.00) attorneys fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from date of sale as provided by law.

SETS ARMY HIKING RECORD

Private John McGregor Makes 500 Miles in Fourteen Days With Full Pack.

Washington.—An endurance test has been completed by Private John McGregor of the Second division, believed by veteran infantrymen here to establish a new record for long-distance hiking with full pack for the army.

Major General Harbold, executive assistant to General Pershing, chief of staff, issued the official reports of McGregor's feat showing that he covered the last 500 miles of the march in 14 days, an average of more than 35 miles a day. The entire distance covered was 1,100 miles, from San Antonio, Tex., to Denver, Colo., and was made in 40 marching days.

The door of the private bastile has been stolen by an outsider, it is reported; most of the glass in both windows is gone, and the running water no longer is confined to the pipes and faucets. The only light in the jail is furnished by a lantern and the report says that there hasn't been any oil in this lamp in months.

THE CITY'S SOUL

By LYDIA LION ROBERTS.

(©, 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"My soul, Lottie, plaintively mocked Frank, "you're as pleasant as a blizzard. What in the world is the matter with you lately?"

"I guess it's my soul," Lottie replied ruefully. "I've lost it somewhere. Since nursing the family through the grippe I've forgotten I ever had a soul. I think it has drowned in the dishpan."

Frank watched her as she nervously got the children ready for school, a worried frown between her usually merry brown eyes.

"No, I don't want any more breakfast," Lottie said, as he waited for her to sit opposite him. "I don't feel hungry lately; I just feel cross."

"Listen, dear," said Frank briskly as he got up to get his overcoat, "I'm going to give you $5 and I want you to use it to find your soul. When you've found it bring it home with you and we'll try to make it so contented it won't leave you again."

"I wouldn't blame the whole family for leaving," smiled Lottie. "I'm so disagreeable it's a wonder anyone can live with me, let alone a fine, handsome husband like you," she roguishly added.

"Well, I formed the pleasant habit years ago and I'm getting so old I hate to change my habits," declared Frank cheerily as he hurried off to work.

A few hours later Lottie stood gazing at the tempting window displays.

"I haven't had a thing new all winter," she told herself. "I think the shock of seeing myself in a new waist would make me better at once."

After her purchase she walked slowly along the crowded streets.

The flapping and whirring of wings attracted her attention and she stopped to watch the pretty scene. A boy with the look of strong, clean youth, growing into manhood, was standing in the middle of a path. Almost motionless except for a slight opening of his hand, an absorbed smile on his freckled face, he lured the fat, placid pigeons close to him by his offer of their favorite food. As he scattered the peas around him the eager birds walked up his back, waddled around his neck, clung to his arms and shoulders and rested on his fingers.

"Oh, to be an artist," sighed Lottie in appreciation of the beauty of the picture. "I'll carry that picture home in my brain gallery to tell the children."

Almost before she realized it the noon bells rang out.

"I have just time to step into the cathedral for the noon service," she planned. "I've lived near the city all my life and never been in before."

The brief sermon over, the singing done, many people went out, but Lottie lingered with others. Presently the grand tones of the organ filled the room, and clear and sweet rose the haunting strains of a violin.

"Any woman," said Lottie to herself, as she quietly wiped her eyes, "who couldn't go back to work after that, with her soul big and whole and her heart full of love to be poured out on her family—well—this woman had just better, or she's a slacker in the battle of life.

"Now for a stroll down my favorite famous street, and then back to the train," she decided, as she left the church.

"Of all adorable combinations of quaint knockers, lovely doorways, old-world windows, and the benediction left by the spirits of the good and great people who have lived here—is it possible to get such an atmosphere anywhere but in my own dear, dirty, heart-warming city!" exclaimed Lottie, as her walk led her finally to the river sparkling merrily in the sun.

"Almost train time, but I've just a few minutes to see this picture on exhibition at one of the big stores."

"Four hundred years ago this picture was painted," she heard the lecturer say, as she slipped into the hall.

"That was before this country was settled," thought Lottie. "Before the inventions and modern marvels. Yet I today, just one tired little housewife, sit here and view the unfaded richness, the glowing colors of that picture. The artist is gone, but he left a bit of his soul on canvas and after 400 years it speaks to my cramped, kitchen-bound one and bids it grow.

"Oh, bless anyone who gives anything to the world that makes us bigger and better, so that we can hand on the heritage of beauty to our children! I'm going home where I belong, and 'carry on' my share. I've got the loveliest home and finest man, and most remarkable children that any woman needs to keep her soul safe and strong.

"I guess my soul just had growing pains—let's hope it has stretched a little today." And with a whimsical smile at herself, Lottie turned homeward.

"Well?" inquired Frank, after he had listened with a pleased smile to her account of the day, "how is your—"

"Keep still, you tease," answered Lottie. "Yes, I found it, where I always do—in the city. There's a mighty rhythm, a power and a peace, always to be found by those who seek, in the soul of the city. I'm ready to go 'marching on,' in tune again with life."

BOY BURNS UP MOTORBOAT

Heard Mother Objecting to Father Taking Ride in Craft, So He Destroyed It.

Philadelphia.—The mystery of the burning of the powerboat Susan G. at Camden has been cleared up by the confession of Ernest Gries, Jr., seventeen years old.

The youth told the police he burned the boat to please his mother. He told of lying on the lounge in the sitting room of his home while his mother and father were arguing over a trip the father wanted to take on the craft with a boat club over the holiday. Mrs. Gries did not want her husband to go.

The boy said he told his mother he would burn the boat, and so, early in the morning he went aboard in his canoe, soaked everything with gasoline from the tank, set it on fire and was blown overboard. He swam ashore, he said, and went to bed.

Monoplane Invented by Italian Engineer Said to Need Little Landing Space.

Rome, Italy.—An airplane capable of landing without the need of a large aviation field, able to travel more than 300 miles an hour and, if necessary, to meander along at only a few miles an hour is announced as the invention of an Italian engineer, Epaminonda Bertucci of Rome.

The inventor reports that he has already tried out the machine on a small scale and regards his first experiments as indicative of the success of the invention. The new machine is primarily intended for aerial war chasing and is to be armed with a machine gun. It is a monoplane.

THE BRACELET

By MILDRED WHITE.

(©, 1921, Western Newspaper Union.)

Constance turned, with a sigh of impatience, as a handsome young woman with somber eyes took the chair close by. Though the car was filled, she fancied that her companion guest of the recent house party had maneuvered for just this position.

Constance did not wish to act a friendly part which she did not feel; she was too heartsick for pretense.

Roger, who had loved her always—Constance thought of the "always" with a catch at her throat—Roger had been mysteriously and unaccountably won away by this gypsy-eyed stranger.

In her heart, his fiancee knew that the designing and unscrupulous one must have carried into action the saying that "all is fair in love." For it was undoubtedly true that the young woman of many charms and many admirers had fallen in love desperately and immediately with Roger who had been invited to the Carruth's party to be her own cavalier, as a matter of course.

The coldness in his demeanor which puzzled her began, she remembered, after his second evening in Coralie DeBoll's playful society.

Then daily the breach widened, until now, upon the return trip of the house party, Roger found his chair on one side of the Pullman, while she, with Coralie installed nearby, found hers upon the other. Coralie, in passing, had stooped so that her dusky hair brushed Roger's cheek, to whisper some word or message. Presently the dark-eyed young woman spoke.

"And you," she said bitterly, "are going back, I suppose, to continue the holiday game, while I go back to work. It has not occurred to you, probably, Miss Fortunate Lynd, that I am obliged to work. I am social secretary to a woman who prefers to pay more for her stationery than she pays her help. I have a mother to support. You have met my mother?" Connie nodded.

"She is a dear old lady, I quite loved her. Perhaps you would like me to exchange chairs so that she may sit near you now?"

"Heavens, no!" exclaimed Coralie. "Mother is all right opposite. I thought I'd like to talk with you. I suppose in her many confidences mother enlarged upon her youthful romance and runaway marriage with her foreign music-teacher who was my father.

Coralie was not listening. She had bent her pretty head to examine the jeweled bracelet that Constance wore. The bracelet was as unusual as valuable—one of Aunt Millicent's gifts.

"Queer," muttered the girl, "how one person will have all the good gifts of life, while another——"

When, after a time, she looked down absently toward her hand resting against the chair's arm, Constance's bracelet was no longer there. Without alarm she arose to search her surroundings. The costly trinket must be near by, but it was not. The conductor, happening along, joined her in the search, the porter also was called, passengers in proximity offered their services, but the jeweled bracelet had disappeared. Roger Compton came slowly forward at the commotion, concern banishing for a moment his offended attitude.

Coralie's old mother came too—then abruptly the conductor called for a detective who was in another section of the train. Some of the passengers were indignant at the suggestion of a search; others, willingly agreeable. Coralie smiled contemptuously at Roger, "Much a-do," she quoted with a shrug of her shoulders. But Constance white and wide eyed was gazing into the anxious face of Coralie's old mother.

"The conductor," trembled the mother, "must be quite crazy, Miss Lynd. He actually thinks my daughter has your bracelet; insists, that he saw her slip it into her blouse as he came along. My Coralie—the best girl that ever lived."

Suddenly Constance bent to snap open her traveling bag. With a cry she caught from its depths a small velvet case. Beneath the conductor's eyes she opened it. An unusual jeweled bracelet glinted within. "A mistake," she said unsteadily. "Please pardon me—everybody. Here—is my bracelet."

When the excitement had abated, when the train went rolling into the city station, Coralie DeBall stooped to kiss forcefully Constance's averted face. Into Constance's hand she pressed a hard object.

"Tell me," whispered the strange, somber, young woman, "why you lied for me, when you knew I took the thing? I was mad for a moment, with the thought of all you possessed—it seemed that some part should be rightfully mine. But why—"

Constance smiled through her tears."

"Your mother's faith," she answered, "must not be destroyed." Roger waited to draw Constance close to his side, as she stepped from the train.

"Dearest," he said, "that was the most generous deed. You see, I happen to know that you had two bracelets exactly alike. Your Aunt Millicent told me only last night of the old-fashioned pair she had given you. Constance, dear, can you forgive what has never been disloyalty but only a passing doubt of your love?"

And happily Constance forgave.

Special program at the Imperial next Saturday and Sunday, "THE BIRTH OF A RACE." The picture beigns with the creation of the world. Then comes the story of Noah. Next, Moses is seen leading vast throngs to the promised land. The trial of Christ before Pontius Pilate is followed by a portrayal of the Saviour carrying His cross, and then is seen the crucifiction, splendidly pictured with huge throngs in the background. The second part of the picture is a modern American drama. The two parts are very different in treatment and effect, but each is excellent of its kind. Don't miss this splendid picture.

A FORTUNE

More fortunes are made in the business world than in any other line. To get your first start you must have a business education. Write the Union Commercial College, Grand Forks, N. Their Real Reason.

"But I thought men were supposed to adore women for having just what they haven't got, just as we adore them for their physical strength and their brains." "So they say, and so we say, because otherwise there would be no marriages," said Mrs. Vachell. "But it is a lie. We only love their strength for the sake of getting the better of it. They cultivate our foolishness because it gives them rest from competition, and they can sit down and plume themselves."—From "Three Loving Ladies," by Mrs. Dowdall.

Peroxide Good Remedy.

For a painful ulcerated tooth use peroxide, either full strength or diluted one-half with warm (not hot) water. Nothing will relieve more quickly and it will cleanse the mouth and sweeten the breath. It is used for sore throat as well as for sores of all kinds, as it is antiseptic and one of the safest and cheapest germicides known. If it seems to make the gums a little sensitive after using, rinse the mouth with a weak solution of baking soda.

FAST GAME FRIDAY NIGHT

The high school and city basketball teams will play their first game this season at the gym Friday evening. MORE FARM AID SOUGHT

How to give the man and woman on the most distant Minnesota farm a real voice and increasing influence in agricultural and pubic affairs, was the problem studied by county agents who met this week in St. Paul in the ninth annual state extension and farm bureau conference.

"Strengthen the township unit—the foundation stone of the farm bureau movement, and make it a real factor in the life of every rural community," was the convention's answer to the problem.

Dream Lore.

For a man to dream of reading a newspaper indicates that he will be successful in whatever he undertakes, become very rich and arrive at great honors in the state. To a maid it denotes that she will marry a man who will become rich and powerful and that her children will be people of great consequence. To dream you buy or sell them denotes hard work and small profit. To dream of one printed in a foreign language denotes a letter from afar.

Mustn't Expect To Much.

A United States senator had just finished a night's work on a speech. "You have convinced me," said his secretary, "except for one trifling detail. Where do I, the man who has to buy meat and bread, get off?" The senator touched his nose with his finger and replied sagely: "Well, no legislation is 100 per cent perfect."

MRS. M. G. DRAKE DIES SUDDENLY

A newspaper clipping received here Monday conveys the sad news that Mrs. Milo Drake had passed away suddenly at the family home at Pierre, S. D. No statement is made as to cause of death or any of the circumstances leading up to it.

Mr. and Mrs. Drake and family formerly resided on their farm west of this village a few years ago and moved from here to Pierre, where Mr. Drake was appointed Deputy State Auditor. Besides her husband, Mrs. Drake leaves two sons and a daughter to mourn the loss of a kind and devoted wife and mother.

Heartfelt sympathy of a large circle of friends in this community is extended to the bereaved husband and family in their time of tribulation and sorrow.

The Lyceum course schedule, which was disrupted somewhat by cancellation of one attraction last month, has been rearranged and will start with the appearance of the All Sisters Company on Nov. 23. Last term he gave a course involving Goethe's "Torquato Tasso," of which the class used a text with the lines numbered. Professor Truscott began his lecture on this particular work by asking his students if they had had any difficulty with it. A demure co-ed from South Carolina spoke up: "I can't get line One-Three-O-Five."—New York Evening Post.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE

Whereas, default has been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage executed and delivered by George L. Schmitz and Mame Schmitz his wife, mortgagors, to Martin Bozdeck as mortgagee, upon and covering the following described real estate situate in the County of Pennington, State of Minnesota, to-wit:

The northeast quarter (NE¼) of Section eleven (11) in township one hundred and fifty three (153) north of Range forty (40) west of the fifth principal meridan in Minnesota, containing one hundred and sixty acres more or less according to the Government survey thereof, and which said mortgage bears date the 1st day of November A. D. 1916, and was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for said county of Pennington, State of Minnesota on the 30th day of June A. D. 1917, at 5 o'clock P. M. in book 57 of mortgages on page 133, and

Whereas said default consists in the failure of the said mortgagors to pay the sum of one hundred and ninety two dollars, interest due upon the principal sum of thirty two hundred dollars, and whereas, by virtue of the terms and conditions of the said mortgage the said mortgagee has elected to declare the whole sum secured by said mortgage due and payable, and

Whereas, there is actually due and claimed to be due at the date of this mortgage the sum of three thousand and four hundred dollars, and no action having been instituted to recover the same or any part thereof,

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that under and pursuant to the power of sale therein contained and the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed and the real property therein described will be sold at public auction to the highest bidder for cash, by the sheriff of Pennington County, Minnesota, at the front door of the Court House in the City of Thief River Falls, in said Pennington County on Tuesday the 10th day of January A. D. 1922, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of said day to pay the amount which shall then be due upon said mortgage and the costs of foreclosure thereof including the sum of seventy five dollars attorney's fees as stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure thereof, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale as provided by law.

COCKATOO KILLS BIG ROOSTER

Bird, at Outs With Barnyard Fowl, Wins Battle at Martinez, Cal.

Martinez, Cal.—A bitter battle was fought at the home of B. F. Rhine, local merchant, by a two-pound cockatoo and an eight-pound rooster.

The diminutive cockatoo proved that weight does not always prevail, for after taking a severe grueling for almost five minutes he grabbed the rooster in the windpipe with his sharp beak, administering the death blow.

According to Rhine, the pair had been at outs for several weeks. One morning the cockatoo was perched on a bush in the back yard when the rooster spied him. The heavyweight barnyard champion made a rush at his smaller enemy, spurs and beak.

The cockatoo, however, dug his claws into the rooster's breast, and pulling himself upright administered the death blow.

MATHEMATICS OF BAD ROADS

Farmer Solves Problem of Hours Lost in Making Trip Over Road That Is Deep in Mud.

If it takes a farmer, making a trip through the mud one hour and a half longer than when the roads are firm, how many hours are lost in a year if 1,000 farmers make an average of 12 trips a month? What would be the monetary loss if each 1½ hours lost be estimated at 75 cents per hour for each man and his team? This "two-in-one" proposition gave our old cat considerable trouble, but he finally worked it out thus: One farmer multiplied by 1½ hours multiplied by 12 trips, multiplied by 1,000 farmers, multiplied by 12 months equals 216,000 hours lost; going a step further, and multiplying 216,000 by 75 cents, you have $162,000 per annum lost to the farmers. Our old cat is now pondering how many road bonds this annual loss would float at 5 per cent interest.—Union Times.

A LITTLE CHILD

By JULIA A. ROBINSON.

(©, 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Jack walked slowly homeward, with bowed head and knitted brow. Home! Was it home to which he was going? Could that bare room in the lodging house be called home? Once he had had a home, cozy and cheerful, with a little wife to make him happy, but they had quarrelled. He hardly remembered what it was about. In bitter anger they had separated. He had come to the city and had lived his lonely life and had heard no word from Sally since he left.

It came back to him in vivid recollection as he walked the street, oblivious of surroundings. Perhaps it was because it was just six years today since he left her that he was thinking of the past. He had kept the date.

Sally was a pretty girl, with laughing eyes, bright and witty—saucy sometimes, changeable and high-spirited; yet loving and tender, always begging for pardon after each outbreak, arms clinging about his neck.

Jack had loved this fiery young thing whom he had won.

To drown his sorrow Jack had plunged into business. He had made money, but it brought him no happiness. Once he had gone back, remorsefully, longing for Sally. The old town looked as it did the morning he went away.

The great elm tree spread its friendly branches in front of the cottage, as of yore (Sally loved that tree). Lilacs were in bloom. The house had a friendly air. He almost expected to see Sally open the door and come out with her old bright smile.

The door did open, but it was not Sally's face that met him. A man, young and vigorous, paused on the step as he saw Jack confronting him.

"Good day, my friend," he accosted. "What can I do for you?"

Jack stared. "Is — does — where's Sally?" he jerked.

"Sally?" laughed the man. "Who's Sally?"

"Sally—she lived here," stammered Jack.

"I don't know anyone by that name," returned the man. "No one by that name lives here."

Jack stared, bewildered, but soon recovered himself. Of course the man would not know her by her first name: "Mrs. Mason," he explained. "Is she at home?"

"Oh, Mrs. Mason," the stranger answered. "She left two years ago. We bought the house of her. She needed money, I believe; was in a tight place and had to give it up to raise funds."

Jack gasped. "Gone! Where did she go?"

"Sorry I can't inform you," answered the man. "She left town."

Jack turned in a daze and stumbled into the street. All the sunshine had gone out of life. Sally gone!

It was a drizzling storm, but what did it matter to the man dragging himself to his lodgings? He reached the crossing. Vehicles obstructed the passage, and he waited.

Many others waited, too. Among them was a little child, who feared to cross. She looked timidly at the heavy teams and the slush in the street, then carefully scanned the faces of those about her. With a look of relief and a smile on her baby face, she crowded her way to Jack's side, placing her tiny hand in his.

"Please, sir, take me across," she lisped, her blue eyes looking into his with a child's confidence.

The touch of the little hand thrilled him. He answered, took her in his arms, and carried her across the street.

"Thank you, sir," she beamed, as he landed her on the sidewalk.

"Tell me where you live and I will take you home," he said, a new interest awakening in his heart.

She led him down a side street, chatting all the way.

"Have you a baby girl?" she asked. "My mamma's got me, but she cries all the time, and when I say my prayers I pray for daddy to come home."

She stopped before a tenement house.

"Here it is," she cried, as she sprang into her mother's arms.

"Roxy, it's so late!" cried the woman. "I was afraid you were lost."

She turned to thank the stranger for bringing her child home, but started with a cry.

Jack started, too. "Sally!" he gasped.

"Jack!" she cried, drawing away.

"To think that I should find you thus. You have suffered."

"Let that pass. Why have you come?"

"The baby brought me—this child—who is she?"

"She's ours, Jack—our baby. She was born six months after you went away."

"Our baby, and I never knew!"

"How could you? I came to the city to get work—Jack, I've missed you so!"

"Sally, I've wanted you more than I can tell—I want you now. Can't we begin again? I love you. Can you forgive the past?"

"Forgive you?" she moaned. "It was my fault. Can you forgive me? Oh, Jack, I've longed for you so!"

"Forgive you, dearest? I have nothing to forgive. We did not understand, that was all. We did not know how to take our love. It needed these years of sorrow to teach us. We will begin again. [illegible]

The Black Faced "Sleuths"

By HAROLD SINCLAIRE

(©, 1921, Western Newspaper Union.)

"I tell you, Dave, that fellow, Ralph Tilden, isn't worthy of your sister," said Mart Woods.

"All you've got to do is to convince me of the fact," replied Dave Brierly, brother of Rose Brierly, the prettiest girl in Brampton.

"I can do that," asserted his companion positively. "I'll convince you, all right," asserted Mart. "The only thing is to convince Rose."

"He'll get his walking papers mighty quick if he is the wolf in sheep's clothing you say he is," observed Dave, smartly.

"Very well, I'll have some news for you in a day or two," promised Mart. "I'll show the rascal up in his true colors."

Rose had never given the least encouragement to Mart's advances. In fact, she had never known what love meant until Ralph Tilden had come into her life.

The latter was a manly young fellow, whom every girl might be proud to attract. He had been recently admitted to the bar; his first case in court had been the defense of a poor woman whose suit other lawyers had declined because she could not pay a fee. Ralph had won the case, its details got into the public prints, and he had earned golden opinions as to his professional ability and his philanthropic unselfishness.

All unconscious of the deft plots being woven to disturb their happiness, Rose and Ralph passed some pleasant hours. Mart came to Dave Brierly one day, elated and confident.

"Well, I've got the goods on that Tilden," he announced. "Twice a week he leaves his office at about eight o'clock in the evening. He never gets home until two in the morning. A fellow who does that regularly is up to something, isn't he?"

"As what now?" challenged Dave.

"Well, carousing around. Let us be on hand tonight to take up the trail when he leaves his office."

"I'm agreeable, provided we can do it. I don't want to blunder myself into a laughing stock."

"Say," advanced Mart with spirit; "I've arranged a great plan. We'll disguise ourselves."

"How?" questioned Dave, dubiously.

It took a long time for Mart to induce his companion to join forces with him. His plan was a simple one. They were to blacken their hands and faces.

At length Dave agreed to the proposition. About eight o'clock that evening the young lawyer, Ralph Tilden, left his office.

A drizzle changed into a dreary pelting rain in a short time. Dave was glad when at last Tilden reached a two-story building on one of the lower strata streets of the city.

"Do you see!" cried Mart exultingly, grasping the arm of his companion. "What did I tell you?"

"Why, what do you mean?" inquired Dave, staring blankly.

"That place—downstairs, saloon, upstairs the most notorious gambling house in the city."

"How do you know it is?" submitted Mart pointedly.

"Why—er—that is, I heard so—some one told me," explained Mart stumblingly.

In his excitement the speaker wiped his face with his handkerchief. Some people passing by stared strangely. Then a policeman came up, regarded them with a suspicious glare, and caught each by the collar.

"Ah!" he remarked—"disguising yourselves, eh? You'll explain this to the sergeant, my hearties."

Remonstrances were in vain. A hooting crowd followed the two seekers after "local color" clear to the station. No wonder! Where the rain had trickled and their careless hands had wandered, the faces of the unhappy captives were streaked in ludicrous patches of lamp black.

Somehow, they managed to get out of their trouble; somehow, too, the story got out.

"There seems to be something to explain," remarked Rose to Ralph the next evening.

"Ma chere, c'es que je t' aime," replied Ralph, enigmatically—"which means, how much I love you. In other words, a poor teacher of languages, too poor to select his preferable residence, lives in the building where our good friends located me. He has been teaching me French."

Which explained the seeming mystery and made fair, trustful Rose Brierly love him more than ever.

Why Kitten Chases Its Tail.

The amateur scientist has discovered why a kitten chases its own tail. The answer is simple—the kitten doesn't know the tail belongs to him.

When a cat is young, according to the A. S., there is little "feeling" in its tail. Unless the tail is stepped on or pinched the kitten feels no sensation. Therefore, when he sees that strange thing wagging he just naturally has to chase it.

When he catches up with it and bites it the kitten is surprised to find he is hurting himself. But it takes many bites to convince him that the tail is actually part of his body.

CHASES BLACK CHICK AWAY

One of That Color Was Enough in This Hen's Family, So She Drives Intruder Off Nest.

Allentown, Pa.—Does a sitting hen associate ideas with colors or has she a knowledge of arithmetic.

This is the problem that is puzzling an amateur chicken fancier who is trying to practice economy while following his favorite hobby.

A Rhode Island Red hatched seven yellow and one black chicks; three days later another hen brought forth a brood of four yellow and one black balls of fluff.

For economy's sake the second flock was doubled up with the first. The mother hen opened her wings and clucked a welcome to the newcomers and all went well until she spotted the two black chicks together. Then she saw red. One black chick was enough for her family, and she promptly pecked and chased the offending black out of her nest.

SETS ARMY HIKING RECORD

Private John McGregor Makes 500 Miles in Fourteen Days With Full Pack.

Washington.—An endurance test has been completed by Private John McGregor of the Second division, believed by veteran infantrymen here to establish a new record for long-distance hiking with full pack for the army.

Major General Harbold, executive assistant to General Pershing, chief of staff, issued the official reports of McGregor's feat showing that he covered the last 500 miles of the march in 14 days, an average of more than 35 miles a day. The entire distance covered was 1,100 miles, from San Antonio, Tex., to Denver, Colo., and was made in 40 marching days.

WHEN DIPLOMAT GOT EVEN

Chinese Minister Waited, but Scored Effectively When the Right Time Came.

In a London club, when the Chinese minister happened to be present, a rather tactless speaker referred to the position of women in China and how they were debarred from so many of the privileges of men. He meant no ill, but what he said was indiscreet and led to a moment's embarrassing silence, after which the conversation was resumed on other subjects.

The minister did not speak for a while, but presently, during a pause, he turned to the man who had made the critical remark:

"This is a very beautiful club you have here, sir."

"Yes, I believe it is the finest."

"Much finer than your ordinary private houses?"

"Certainly. None of our private houses is as large and beautiful as this," was the response.

"I suppose you have your women here—your mothers and sisters and wives and daughters. Of course, you must have them here to enjoy your beautiful house with you."

"Why, no. It is against the rules. They are not allowed here at all."

"Why not?" said the minister.

And the clubman saw the point.—From the Sunday at Home.

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT

Soldier's Rejoinder Somehow Seemed to Leave Masher in a Mild State of Reflection.

It was a street car, and he was a fearfully-got-up masher. Over his pince-nez he eyed the other passengers haughtily, and they in turn looked at him with amused, indulgent smiles.

Presently a soldier of the Seaforth Highlanders entered and took his seat beside the masher. A stalwart fellow, he soon became the cynosure of all eyes.

The masher looked at him for a moment. Then sliding up to him, he said: "I say, I've got—er—a brother who is a soldier, don't you know!"

"Is that a fact?" said the soldier, taking a look at the questioner; "well, that's queer. Ye see, I've got a brother who is a confounded idiot; so we're about even, I'm thinking."

For a moment the masher looked as if he had swallowed something that had disagreed with him. Then he sank back in his seat and thought it over for the remainder of the journey.—London Tit-Bits.

How to Tell.

It is quite easy to tell how long a man has been married by the way he speaks to his wife. If he says "My darling wife," that means three months; "wifey," six months; "the wife," one year; "Mrs. Blank," two or three years; "the missus," five or six years; "mother," seven years; "my better half," ten years; "the old lady," twenty years; "grandma," twenty-nine years; "Mrs. Blank," forty-two years; "Jane," fifty years.—Portland Oregonian.

Theocratic Government.

Theocracy was the name given to a system of government by ecclesiastical authorities, professedly in the name of and under the direction of heaven itself. The priests claimed to rule under the immediate sovereignty of God, and the revelations announced as coming from the deity were given out as the civil law of the state. The people of ancient Israel were under such a government from the time of the Exodus until the accession of King Saul.

Lifted Horizons.

While all melts under our feet, we may well grasp at any exquisite passion, or any contribution to knowledge that seems by a lifted horizon to set the spirit free for a moment, or any stirring of the senses, strange dyes, strange colors, and curious odors, or work of the artist's hands, or the face of one's friends.—Walter Pater, in The Renaissance.

Impartial.

An English clergyman, Father Black, spent a great deal of his time visiting prisons and trying to reform the inmates. On one occasion a housebreaker said to him gratefully: "I must thank you, sir, for what you have done for me. There was a time when I knew nothing of God or of the devil, either, but somehow you have made me love 'em both."

Thackeray.

TAX RATE IS HIGHER

In spite of a lowered state levy, and paring down of village expenses, the tax rate for the coming year will be about ten mills higher than last year in this village. Thief River and Goodridge have similar increases, the latter village having the highest rate in the county, with St. Hilaire second and Thief River third. As valuations have been kept at low level in both St. Hilaire and Goodridge, the increase will not affect property owners as much there as at Thief River where valuations have been considerable higher. The rate, as expressed in mills, signifies but little as it is determined by the amount of valuation turned in by the assessor. A low valuation with high rate, or a high valuation with low rate can produce the same amount of revenue.

Going To Canada

Mr. and Mrs. Martin Hanson shipped their household goods yesterday, and they are leaving this week for Rainy River, Ont., Canada, where they will make their home with their son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Joe Fraser. Mr. Hanson has rented out his farm to Otto Johnson who moved onto the place a short time ago.

Mr. and Mrs. Hanson are among the earliest settlers in this part of the county having resided here well onto forty years. Their children being all grown and having established themselves elsewhere, leaving Mr. and Mrs. Hanson without help to operate the farm, was the reason for their decision to move into town to spend their declining years free from the cares and worries incident to operating the farm.

Sam Person who has been employed in the Shevlin, Carpenter planeing mill at Fort Francis the past season, returned here Saturday to spend a couple months after which he will return to Ft. Francis.

Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Olsen, accompanied by Ed. Erickson, autoed Saturday to Crookston where Mrs. Olsen remained to take treatment for an inflamed eye that has bothered her for some time.

A Scandinavian minister up near Strathcona refused to allow an American Legion firing squad to enter his church during a military funeral held for a Legion member, and as a result he is coming in for considerable censure for his unAmerican attitude.

H. S. Trims City

The high school basketeers romped home with a 22 to 4 victory over the city lads in thier game at the gym last Friday evening. While the city team had a big advantage in weight, it seemed to avail them nothing and substitution of fresh players at quarters was of equal effect in stopping the high school boys who seemed able to make scores at will in spite of desperate opposition.

Order Equipment

Another indication that better times can be expected before many months, is the attitude of railroads in regard to ordering new equipment. Roads running out from St. Paul have lately ordered material which totals over $25,000,000.00 in value. Increased business on all lines is the reason given for placing this mammoth order at this time.

Whole Family Killed

A family of eight persons residing near Wickes, Ark., were all killed in a terrific storm at that place last Friday. A peculiar feature of the storm was that little damage was done except on the farm where the above mentioned family resided.

Mrs. J. J. Hill Dies

Sale Cancelled

The consignment sale planned by the Red River Valley Livestock Association for Nov. 23, at Crookston, has been cancelled as a sufficient number of stock has not been consigned to make the sale possible. Breeders are showing a preference for the usual sales that are held in connection with the Winter Show which will be held in February.

Quartette Pleases

The All Sisters Quartette which appeared here last evening as the first number on the lyceum course, played to a well filled house. Their program was varied, and all who attended express themselves as well pleased. Credit is due the sponsors of the course for securing this class of talent to appear here.

Heavy Storms In West

Train schedules are disrupted, wires are down and many trains are blockaded in the mountain region to the west where real old fashnioned blizzards prevailed first part of this week. Heavy snows are reported all thru western Canada east of the Rockies.

Frightened when the pole of the jumper to which they were hitched fell down, a team driven by Norman Holmes made a spectacular run up the street Tuesday afternoon. Norman staid in the rig until the horses broke loose in front of the Mission church. No damage was done and the driver escaped from his wild ride without a scratch.

ANNUAL SALE OF XMAS SEALS

Does it pay for the people of Minnesota to buy Christmas Seals?

As the fourteenth annual sale of Christmas Seals is about to start, this question is put squarely up to the people of the state by officials of the Minnesota Public Health Association.

In the United States as a whole, 114 out of every 100,000 people died of tuberculosis in 1920, while in the State of Minnesota 90 people out of every 100,000 died of tuberculosis, which goes to show that the work against this disease in Minnesota is bearing fruit.

If we stop to consider the enormous amount of money that has been spent for so called consumption cures which of course never cured) how much better off are the people in Minnesota when they buy a few Seals to aid the Minnesota Public Health Association to teach the people how tuberculosis and other preventable diseases can be prevented and combatted.

M. G. Drake Here

Assistant State Auditor M. G. Drake of Pierre, S. D., was here first part of this week looking after his real estate interests in Sanders township, and incidently to call on his numerous friends in St. Hilaire and vicinity. Mr. Drake informs us that the death of Mrs. Drake which was chronicled in the last issue of this paper, was caused by heart trouble following an attack of diphtheria. She and her little son both had the disease and were apparently well when she suffered the stroke of heart failure which caused death within a very short time. The boy is recovering nicely after his illness. Both daughters escaped having the disease.

The river has frozen over completely at this point, but there is no skating owing to the snowfall last week. There is some talk about building a rink where skating may be enjoyed during the winter.

John Loberg and Ed Erickson returned Thursday afternoon bringing with them a deer secured on their big game hunting trip up in the Rapid River country a short distance from where Herman Nelson resides.

August Berglunud, who has been employed in the paper mills in Canada during the summer, is now engaged on a railroad constuction cntract near Poplar, Minn.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE.

Whereas, default has been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage executed and delivered by George L. Schmitz and Mame Schmitz his wife, mortgagors, to Martin Bozdeck as mortgagee, upon and covering the following described real estate situate in the County of Pennington, State of Minnesota, to-wit:

The northeast quarter (NE¼) of Section eleven (11) in township one hundred and fifty three (153) north of Range forty (40) west of the fifth principal meridan in Minnesota, containing one hundred and sixty acres more or less according to the Government survey thereof, and which said mortgage bears date the 1st day of November A. D. 1916, and was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for said county of Pennington, State of Minnesota on the 30th day of June A. D. 1917, at 5 o'clock P. M. in book 57 of mortgages on page 133, and

Whereas said default consists in the failure of the said mortgagors to pay the sum of one hundred and ninety two dollars, interest due upon the principal sum of thirty two hundred dollars, and whereas, by virtue of the terms and conditions of the said mortgage the said mortgagee has elected to declare the whole sum secured by said mortgage due and payable, and

Whereas, there is actually due and claimed to be due at the date of this mortgage the sum of three thousand and four hundred dollars, and no action having been instituted to recover the same or any part thereof,

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that under and pursuant to the power of sale therein contained and the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed and the real property therein described will be sold at public auction to the highest bidder for cash, by the sheriff of Pennington County, Minnesota, at the front door of the Court House in the City of Thief River Falls, in said Pennington County on Tuesday the 10th day of January A. D. 1922, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of said day to pay the amount which shall then be due upon said mortgage and the costs of foreclosure thereof including the sum of seventy five dollars attorney's fees as stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure thereof, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale as provided by law.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of One Hundred Eighty-two and 40-100 ($182.40) Dollars, interest, which is claimed to be due and is due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage duly executed and delivered by Edward Johnson and M. E. Johnson, his wife, Mortgagors, to Milo G. Drake and Elsie F. Drake Mortgagees, bearing date the 19th day of July, 1918. and with a Power of sale therein contained duly recorded in the Office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Pennington and State of Minnesota, on the 12th day of December, 1918, at 8 o'clock A. M., in book 58 of Mortgages on page 543.

And whereas, the said Mortgagors having failed to pay the taxes on said land and having failed to pay insurance premiums upon insurance policies covering the improvements upon said real estate and having failed to pay the interest on prior mortgages according to the terms of said mortgage, and the mortgagees having been obliged to pay and having paid the sum of Five Hundred Five and 78-100 ($505.78) Dollars, as interest on prior mortgages, premium on insurance policies and costs of foreclosure of prior mortgages.

And whereas, the said Mortgagees have duly elected and do hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice under the terms and conditions of said mortgage and the power of sale therein contained; and whereas, there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice, the sum of Four Thousand Two Hundred Eighty-eight and 18-100 ($4,288.18) Dollars, and whereas, the power of sale has become operative, and no action or proceedings having been instituted at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof;

NOW THEREFORE, NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That by virtue of the Power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the Statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, to wit: The Southeast Quarter of Southeast Quarter (SE¼SE¼) of Section Thirty-three (33) and the South Half of the Southwest Quarter (S½SW¼) and the Northeast Quarter of the Southwest Quarter (NE¼SW¼) of Section Thirty-four (34) all in Township One Hundred Fifty-three (153) North of Range Forty-four (44) West; also the South Half of the Northwest Quarter (S½NW¼) and the South Half of the Northeast Quarter (S½NE¼) and Lots One (1), Two (2), Three (3), and Four (4) of Section Five (5) all in Township One Hundred Fifty-two (152) North of Range Forty-four (44) West of the Fifth Principal Meridian, Pennington County, Minnesota, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Pennington County, Minnesota, at the front door of the Court House in the City of Thief River Falls, Pennington County Minnesota, on the 14th day of January, 1922, at 10 o'clock A. GOLD NOT IN CIRCULATION

Enormous Amount of the Yellow Metal Can Only Be Classed as "Buried Treasure."

To the already large stocks of personal effects of this character the American people have added since the war $300,000,000 worth of gold manufactures, remarks the St. Louis Times. The total world's consumption of gold for industrial purposes from 1890 to 1910 was $2,000,000,000, or an average of about $100,000,000 per annum, while the world production in the 20-year period was slightly less than $6,000,000,000.

What becomes of this metal not represented in the visible monetary stocks and in industrial consumption? Four million dollars' worth are annually rammed into the mouths of Americans in the form of dental work. Of the $1,500,000,000 worth shipped into the Orient, chiefly India, for the 24-year period for industrial purposes, millions are unaccounted for except as "buried." How much of the world's supply is invisible by virtue of being "hidden wealth" it would be impossible to conjecture, but it is reasonable to suppose that the greater percentage of this yellow metal not accounted for either in visible monetary stocks or in industrial consumption belongs to the mysterious category of "buried treasure."

MORE THAN ORDINARY CLOCK

Timepiece in North Carolina Town Connected With Most Ingenious Electrical Combination.

From its sound, and all other obvious indications, the casual visitor to Mooresville, N. C., would suppose the clock in the Presbyterian church of that town to be of the ordinary hour-announcing town-clock variety. This is not true, however, for an ingenious electrical combination is used for striking. In a house near the church hangs a finely adjusted eight-day clock, whose hour-striking hammer is fitted with a silk cord. This cord, with each backstroke of the hammer, closes a switch which sends current from a battery into a relay. This relay cuts in the village power line and sets into action a motor on the church-tower floor. As the motor armature spins, a pulley on its end winds up a length of belting with a chain attached, which pulls the bell striker. The circuit lasts only as long as the hammer of the master clock is drawn back, and thus the town clock strikes the hour in perfect synchronism with the master mechanism.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

INSTINCT GUIDES ASTRONOMER.

Miss Annie B. Cannon, an astronomer in an English university, is endowed with a remarkable gift of classifying the distances of stars in the spectrum almost at a glance, a feat that would otherwise require laborious measurement. She has thus classified 700,000 of them in a great catalogue new being published.

Referring to Miss Cannon's scientific gift, Prof. H. H. Turner, chief assistant of the Royal observatory at Greenwich, declared her the only astronomer in the world able instinctively to identify stars by their spectra, and that her word was of immense value in solving the riddle of the universe.

BUSY AFTERNOON AT THE ZOO

Man Has Fingers Cut and Amateur Daniel From Brooklyn Is Saved From Wolves' Den.

Outside of rescuing a man from the wolves' den and another from the clutches of a hyena and trying to make beavers move into a new home, the keepers at the Bronx zoo had nothing to do the other day, remarks the New York World.

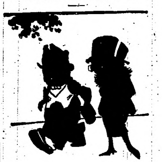
John Healy, custodian of the zoo's baby carriages, staged the first thrill. Weary of watching docile, baby carriages, John had made, or thought he had made, friends with Bill, the big hyena. The other afternoon he announced he had Bill so tamed that "he would eat out of his hand."

John walked up to Bill and held out a handful of meat. Bill took the meat and tried his best to get John's hand. John was rescued with two cut fingers as casualties.

F. K. Ellis, whose home is in Greenpoint, Brooklyn, wanted more action and climbed into the den of wolves. In a moment the wolves were very playful and Ellis was calling for help. Keepers dragged him out in the nick of time.

Several months ago, while some of the beavers were visiting in another part of the Bronx, Curator Ditmars thought he would build a new frame house for them. The wanderers returned several days ago and since then the keepers have vainly tried to coax them to enter.

INTERESTED IN REAL ESTATE



Mrs. Reading—I admit I prefer the old things. I just dote on "The House of Seven Gables."

Mr. Flathunter—Never heard of it. What does it rent for?

LIVED 100 YEARS.

On last March 24 Charles Tully of Hassocks, Sussex county, England, celebrated his hundredth birthday by working a full day in his garden preparing the ground and planting potatoes. He has no difficulty in setting a garden line, for his eyesight is excellent.

In telling about his long life he said that he was first a pork butcher and afterward a farmer. At the time of his retirement from active farming he controlled 2,000 acres. This occurred when he was eighty years old.

This is his recipe for long life: Hard work in the open air, good food and enough of it, but not much at night; a nightcap of whisky and milk, to bed not later than ten and up by seven in the morning if not earlier.

These are still his habits—New York Herald.

To Win the Love of Philip Utard

By DORA MOLLAN

(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

That "A woman with fair opportunity and without an absolute hump may marry whom she likes." And "Vanity Fair" being the book chosen as the week's English lesson for the senior class at the Pitman high, it came naturally about that this fragment of the philosophy of a wise man should be the subject of discussion by a group of girl students gathered in a corner of the big assembly room.

"Why, it's no more to be doubted that Professor Bank's toupe!" This calm statement by Susan Belden ought to have settled the question forever—for hadn't Susan littered the steps of Pitman's school system with heartbreaks? Nor was she the prettiest girl in the class, by several.

Some budding iconoclast in the group murmured, sotto voce, "Her mother feeds 'em!" This drew smothered giggles. But it was Anne Tyson, the acknowledged brains of the senior class, who had the temerity to openly qualify the dictum of the class belle.

"You can win a man, girls, by trickery. But you can't keep him by the same method—not if he's worth it." Came a day when this shaft, sped at a fair mark, was to turn, boomerang-like, and fly back at the archer.

Fate seems to have her own inscrutible reasons for requiring certain pairs of individuals to "fall in" side by side and march in step, even when there is no particular sympathy, or even liking. It was that way at school—and afterward—with Sue Belden, daughter of the proprietor of the town's one little department store, and Anne Tyson, whose father was the town's leading physician.

They lived on the same street, played in the same group as children, were members of the same class in "high," both graduated from the commercial course—and then obtained positions in the same office—that of a big chair factory, which was Pitman's leading industry. And to top it off fate carried her fantasy so far as to plunge them both in love with the same man at the same time.

Philip Utard, son of the senior member of the firm, had been transferred from the Boston headquarters to the Pitman plant to learn the details of production. And gossip speculated as to whether he would not follow the example of his father and of an elder brother—and acquire also a life partner from among the establishment's female personnel. That was getting to be quite the Utard way.

If Philip did meditate any such step it was soon apparent enough—to the watchful gossips—that his choice lay between Anne Tyson and Susan Belden, for Philip divided his leisure very evenly between the Tyson and Belden homes, or escorting the girls alternately to such entertainments as the town afforded. Perhaps he enjoyed the company of Anne's father, for Doctor Tyson was a man of broad and genial culture. And it was still said of Sue's mother that she "fed 'em."

Anyway, on a certain day in January it would have been necessary for Phil Utard himself to toss up a penny had he been pinned down to a decision there and then.

It was on this day that Susan took close note of Anne's heightened color as Utard passed close to their desks. She leaned slightly toward Anne, and with a laugh that was just a little machine made, inquired whether she remembered the schoolroom discussion on the Thackerayism. "What cocksure little idiots we were!" she exclaimed. "Wise men change their minds, don't they, Anne—and wise women?"

There was a challenge in the girl's voice. But from the well-poised Anne it got no response beyond a non-committal "sometimes."

Yet the thoughts of Anne were "long, long thoughts" in the hour intervening between her arrival home and the serving of dinner by the rotund Lucinda, boss of the Tyson menage. This hour Anne habitually spent before the fire in the living room awaiting the docter's return from his afternoon round of calls.

It was here that Anne confessed to herself what she had never confessed before—that for weeks she had been trying with all her might and main—like the nursery rhyme man of the bramble bush—to win the love of Philip Utard. And had she, like the bramble bush man, scratched out both her eyes in the proceeding?

Just because she considered herself a more fit wife than Sue Belden for a man of Philip's mentality, did it follow that she would be able to make him happier? Suppose that, with deliberate effort, she won him—wouldn't he be very likely to discover later that he had been the man of her choice, instead of her being the woman of his? And would that make for happiness for either? There was nothing for her to do but jump right back into that bush!

That evening Philip came to call—and departed vainly trying to recall what he could possibly have done to so change Anne toward him. Not once had she responded to word or look of his in her usual bright, sympathetically interested way. And when her father appeared after his [illegible] she excused herself and said she was going to retire. So it happened the next time—and again.

Now the cooler Anne grew toward Philip the more desirable she became to him, but try as he would he could make no progress toward finding the cause of her new indifference. Denied even the satisfaction of his instinctive social qualities, Utard turned more often to Susan Belden for companionship and the oftener he did the more persistently his thoughts were occupied with Anne.

It was a cold, sullen February Sunday afternoon when it came to Philip that he could stand this state of affairs no longer, and he set out for the Tyson home, determined to corner Anne and get the truth from her if possible.

From her window Anne caught sight of Philip as he toiled up the hill against the bitter north wind. In an instant she was into her fur coat and tam and running down the back stairs. In the kitchen she successfully dodged the vast bulk of Lucinda, who couldn't see "no sense nohow" in going out on such a day—and was on her way down the back road, which led straight out into the open country, at the moment when Philip rang the bell.

Lucinda, with a wave of her pudgy black hand, pointed out the direction of Anne's flight, disclaiming with a shake of her wooly head any responsibility for "sech foolishness." There was a grim, do-or-die look about Philip as he snugged his coat collar about his neck and set out in pursuit.

Anne looked back from the first rise in the road and saw Philip striding across the back yard. As she reconnoitered again from the summit of the second rise he was just topping the first. The wind whipped her short walking skirt tight against her legs. It was hard going. It began to snow, fine light flakes, forerunner of a real storm. But to Anne the pursuit had become a symbol. She had not the slightest thought of turning back. If Philip really wanted to see her—to be with her—badly enough not to give up in spite of anything—well, she would test him to the utmost of her strength.

And Philip—it seemed to him that his very life depended on overtaking that light figure flying before him into the teeth of the storm, even as his happiness must depend on what was to transpire at the end of the chase. He was gaining fast. The snow blinded Anne's eyes, and the bite of the wind sent tears coursing down her cheeks; but still she managed, somehow, to keep putting one foot ahead of the other. He was almost up to her. Her strength was gone. But surely she could take one more step. And then—she vanished from the sight of the man behind her as though the earth had swallowed her.

There was an excavation—some road work going on and the light timber barrier had been blown away by the wind. Unhurt, but exhausted, Anne lay where she fell. But a strong arm lifted her and held her tight, and Phil's voice said: "I was prepared to follow you to the ends of the earth, but not to the center of it. But we're here. And before we get out you've got to tell me why you have frozen me; why you have avoided me; why you ran away from me just now."

Anne was too tired to lift her head from that broad shoulder. "It was because," she said—"because I didn't have an absolute hump."

Phil let it go at that, then. But a hundred times since, over coffee or crib, he has tried to find out what she meant. But Anne only laughs.

Irish Had "Mayflower" Adventure.

Students of Anglo-American history have just directed attention to the fact that Ireland also had her "Mayflower." This was the Eaglewing, which, no later than 1636, set sail with a full passenger list of Ulstermen for the American colonies. There were 40 passengers, among whom were four ministers. Ill-luck began at once, for unconquerable winds drove the vessel to the Scottish coast. A leak then held the ship in the "Kyles of Bute." Starting again, she achieved mid-Atlantic, but there a hurricane did such damage and caused such general discouragement that finally the Irish pilgrims made up their minds that Providence was frowning on their emigration, and turned their vessel back to Ireland.

In Texas they tell how, years ago, an Englishman there imported a famous wolfhound from Europe, in order that he might attain wealth catching wolves, by reason of the scalp money offered by one of the state authorities—$10 each.

Some dyed-in-the-wool Texans were invited to witness the first chase. They followed many miles through the prairie grass, but without getting sight of either wolf or hound. Finally they came to a wooded spot, where a native was chopping.

"Did you see a wolf and a hound pass just now?" cried the Britisher.

"Yes, sir; they just passed."

"How was the race?"

"Pretty hot—nip an' tuck. But the dog was a little ahead."

A Suspicious Nature.

"I don't like Mr. Dubwaite's new stenographer," said Mrs. Dubwaite.

"Why not, my dear?" asked Mrs. Gadspur.

"She has a dreamy look in her eyes."

"Oh, well, she may not be meditating mischief."

"Perhaps not, but when a girl is young and pretty and indulges in day-dreams with a susceptible old fool like Mrs. Dubwaite around, some of those dreams may [illegible] coming true."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

SERBIAN CHILDREN AT SCHOOL

Devastation and Confusion That Followed the War Are Being Overcome by Brave People.

At the present time the situation in regard to education in Serbia is a very serious one because of the devastation and confusion which followed the war. It is by no means a hopeless situation, however, because of the indomitable spirit and unquenchable enthusiasm of the Serbian people, observes Southern Workman. At the end of the war there was scarcely a school building left fit for use. Many had been utterly destroyed and those that were left were mere shells, with no books, school furnishings or equipment of any kind. Most of the men teachers had been killed in the war and many women teachers had died or were seriously incapacitated from the effects of three years of hardship and starvation. The whole school system had to be rebuilt. In less than two years the Serbians accomplished this task. It is by no means completely finished. In many cases the children are crowded into one room, with inadequate seating capacity. Sometimes one teacher has charge of a school of a hundred pupils, but the important facts are that the children are having some kind of schooling again after three years of neglect when the Austrians were in occupation; that even with a scarcity of teachers the high standard of the teaching profession is being maintained and that the standard of education has not been lowered, but on the contrary is being constantly raised.

HAS HAD ADVENTUROUS LIFE

United States Senator Cameron of Arizona Can Recall Wild Days of the Woolly West.

Senator Ralph Cameron of Arizona has had enough adventures in real life to make Bill Hart or Tom Mix look like second-raters, if anyone could get the senator into competition as a story teller with the two leading Wild West movie heroes. Mr. Cameron was once an Arizona sheriff and that was in the days when there were still two-gun men floating around the outskirts of civilization and perforating their enemies now and then with perfectly good bullets made of real lead.

So the present senator's life was far from an easy one. He once captured a bandit wanted pretty badly for murder and bluffed 200 Mexicans and later another crowd of Americans out of their plans to take the bandit away and try him before that well-known American jurist, Judge Lynch. He got the bandit in jail, kept him there and he finally was tried and sent up for a little matter of 99 years.

Avoid Staleness.

You can avoid staleness if you have will power enough to assert yourself. Like the fabled hero of the ancients who grew stronger every time an adversary threw him to the ground you can "come back" if you go to mother earth. Get out into the open. Go to the streams where the fishes play. Climb the hills where you will be compelled to pant good air into the lower lungs. Chase the wild things of the forest and then try to outdo the thunders with unrestrained halloes and see what nature will do for you. There's something in the careless abandon of nature that puts fitness into the whole man.—Grit.

POULTRY

SODIUM FLUORID EFFICIENT

Recently Discovered Insecticide for Fowls Is Cheaply and Quickly Applied.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Nothing has given so much satisfaction in getting rid of chicken lice as sodium fluorid, used by poultry specialists in the United States Department of Agriculture. It kills adults and young lice, including the young which emerge from eggs present at the time of treatment.

Sodium fluorid can be obtained in two forms known as commercial, and as chemically pure. Both of these are in the dry state, the first being a dry powder and the second in small crystals, somewhat lumpy. While the chemically pure material is effective, it is not so easily applied by the dusting method as the more finely powdered commercial form, and furthermore, it costs more. The commercial grade should contain 90 to 98 per cent sodium fluorid.

This material is the sodium salt of the chemical element known as fluorin, and hence is a compound very similar to ordinary table salt, which is known chemically as sodium chlorid. In asking for sodium fluorid, therefore, it is important that the name, "fluorid," be carefully stated to the druggist.

If the proper methods are followed remarkable control is obtained. One thorough application of sodium fluorid to all fowls will destroy completely all the lice present. It is essential, however, to see that treatment is thorough, and that every fowl is treated. It may be applied in two forms—as a dry dust and as a dip. In the dust form the action of sodium fluorid is comparatively slow; hence, if examined the next day after treating, or even two or three days later, a few lice may be found, but the material persists, and after four or five days all lice disappear. It kills, too, all lice emerging from eggs on the feathers. For best results small amounts of the material should be placed on different parts of the infested fowls.

Specialists have found what they call the "pinch method" to be entirely effective against lice, and to have the advantage of economy of time and material. The material is placed in an open vessel on a table, the fowl is held by the wings or legs in one hand, while with the other hand a small pinch of chemical is placed among the feathers next to the skin in this way: One pinch on the head, one on the neck, two on the back, one on the breast, one below the vent, one on the tail, one on either thigh, and one scattered on the underside of each wing spread. Each pinch can be distributed somewhat by pushing the thumb and fingers among the feathers as the material is released. It is advisable when dusting to hold the chickens over a large shallow pan, as in this way the amount of material ordinarily lost is recovered.

Dusting With Sodium Fluorid—an Effective Way to Rid Poultry of Lice.

The material may be applied with a shaker, but this method has disadvantages when compared with the pinch method. The material is shaken into the feathers with one hand while the feathers are opened with the other. A second person is needed to hold and turn the fowl. In this method the amount of sodium fluorid used may be reduced by adding some finely powdered material such as road dust or flour. Fowls should be turned into the open as fast as dusted to prevent possible injury from breathing the dust. For young chickens, young turkeys, and indeed all newly hatched fowls the dusting method is recommended rather than dipping. This applies also to sick fowls.

The common objections to dipping poultry to rid them of lice have been overcome by the specialists by using the sodium fluorid solution. In general the dipping method is applied to the South and to summer treatments in the North. A rather warm, sunny day is preferred so fowls will dry quickly. Windy weather should be avoided.

RARE BIRD FROM THE SUDAN

Important Acquisition Recently Made to the American Museum of Natural History.

Whale-headed, or shoebill, storks are remarkably rare birds. The American Museum of Natural History has just received a skin and skeleton of one of these uncommon members of the feathered world. The specimen was brought back from the Sudan by Irving K. Taylor of New York city. Only four other specimens of this bird are known to be in this country. They were all secured by Colonel Roosevelt, and are all in the National museum at Washington.

The whale-headed stork is a large African bird found only in the papyrus marshes of the Upper Nile and along the northern edge of Lake Victoria and on the Upper Lualaba. It is uncommon, even where found, and very wild. It is now carefully protected by all the European governments which have colonies in Africa, special permission being required for hunting it.

It is of scientific importance for the reason that it may be related to the herons, and, if so, constitutes a very remarkable link between two orders of birds. In appearance it is of gaunt, gray figure, some five feet in height. Its large head is surmounted by a little curled tuft. The expression of its eyes is scowling. Its huge bill, in shape similar to a whale's head, is tipped with a formidable hook.

NOT HURT BY IMMERSION.

The Philippine constabulary has just delivered to the Manila ordnance depot 13 rifles and a large number of cartridges found in the Bicol river on June 13 and 14 by bridge laborers. The arms and ammunition were dropped in the river in 1900 when a boat carrying American soldiers in pursuit of insurgents upset, two soldiers being drowned. Cartridges tested by the workmen exploded though they had lain in the water over 20 years. About 1,200 good cartridges were recovered.—Manila Times.

SOCIETY

ANNUAL CONVENTION DEC. 7-8

The eighteenth annual convention of the Red River Valley Dairymen's Association will be held at Detroit, Minnesota, December 7-8.

There has at no time been a greater interest in dairying in this section of the state than at present, which no doubt will bring the largest attendance ever to the Detroit convention. A splendid program has been prepared. Many of the best authorities on dairying will address the Convention.

Detroit farmers have just opened a new modern creamery which in itself is worth the trip to Detroit to see. This new and progressive creamery association offers a $25.00 silver trophy to the creamery having the largest number of its patrons in atendance at this convention, Detroit creameries barred from competition.

Having splendid hotel and railroad facilities makes Detroit an ideal place for this convention.

A Good Plan

Instead of every business house in town buying indiviual calendars, and passing them out without any further thought, the merchants at Oklee got together and pooled their calendar money and put out a "community calendar" with the names of every doner and his line of business thereon. After ordering plenty of calendars to supply the whole community, there remained nearly $400.00 in the fund which will be used for road work.

Dairy School Soon

Mr. L. V. Wilson of the Dairy Extension Division will hold dairy schools in Pennington county on December 15 and 16. The afternoons will be devoted to the health department when a film will be shown on the value of dairy products free from T. B. and other contagious diseases. This course should be largely attended by both rural and city folks, as the general health of a community depends much on the cleanliness of the dairy products consumed. Meetings will be held in St. Hilaire and Thief River Falls, the exact days to be arranged for next week.

Party Last Night

The Fred Hanson home was the scene of merriment last evening when a large number of friends of Mrs. Hanson tendered her a surprise party. A very pleasant evening was spent at different diversions, and a dainty luncheon was served by the self-invited guests. Before leaving the ladies presented Mrs. Hanson a fine set of dishes as a reminder of the happy occasion.

Mike McAndress returned recently from North Dakota with a better opinion than ever of Minnesota. He says conditions here are bad, but they are nothing compared with what they have to contend with over there.

Mr. and Mrs. L. Paquin, Mr. and Mrs. H. Paquin, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Benoit of Red Lake Falls, were Thanksigving dinner guests here at the home Mr. and Mrs. Nels Benoit.

A carload of soft coal came in yesterday for the local school.

OFFER EXTRA POULTRY PRIZES

Mr. Olaf Neset informs the Poultry Association that he will award a $10.00 Rhode Island Red cockeral to the largest display of Rhode Island Reds brought in by a farmer in Pennington county to the county poultry show. Mr. Neset purchased a high priced bird from the poultry division of the University Farm which was scored as being the best Rhode Island Red in this part of the state by Mr. N. E. Chapman, poultry specialist, last July.

Mr. Dave Gustafson and Harry Schuster of Thief River Falls are also offering high priced birds as premiums in the farmers' class for the largest display of Barred Rocks and S. C. White Leghorns.

Statements from farmers raising poultry are to the effect that a large number of entries will be received from the county this year. The more entries made the larger the premium will be as the prize will be higher when more competition is had.

EASY ENOUGH

By JACK LAWTON.

Copyright, 1921, Western Newspaper Union.

Alice turned to her friend a tear-stained face. "I dont know what I am going to do," she bemoaned, "it is dreadful to be born with a bashful disposition. And having to be tied constantly to Aunt's old fashioned apron strings, keeps me growing more painfully bashful all the time; or maybe its embarrassment, over my own lack of confidence. Anyway I never can have a good time wherever I am, while I am bound to remain tongue tied or stutter at every effort at conversation. It was not so hard to bear before George William Prescott arrived on the scene, but he is bashfully silent too, therin lies my present difficulty."

"Who," asked Cissy abruptly, "is this George William Prescott?" Her diffident friend sighed. "He's the man in my life," she confessed.

"At least, I never took much interest in any man before. He came to Aunt Letties, one evening to pay a duty call, being the guest of her friend Mrs. Seymour. My! it was an awful evening, we just sat and stared at each other, like two people at the dentists; and when I tried to make a remark it sounded insane, and when he did, he'd get red to the ears; but he has been mixing more or less with our set ever since, because Mr. Seymour has taken him into his office and Mr. Prescott is doing so well there, that he's decided to stay on in town. But no one has been able to become very well acquainted with William, that's what Mrs. Seymour calls him, because he is so diffident." Cecelia Rose wrinkled her pretty brows.

"What I am trying to find out," she remarked "is why anyone should care to."

The wide eyes of Alice were tenderly reminiscent, "Mr. Prescott is so wonderfully good looking," she mused, "his eyes look as if they were trying to say many wonderful things that his lips cannot. While his ways—"

"Mercy," interrupted Cissy, "I do believe you are in love. That would be a serious state of affairs, especially if your George William—oh! let's call him Bill, to take the stiffness away—if your Bill were also speechlessly in love with you. Fancy two frigid glaciers, shining upon each other!" "Cissy dear," begged Alice, "you have such drawing power, couldn't you draw George William—Bill, I I mean, out of his shell, and make him approachable?"

"Approachable to you?" Cissy laughed, "Oh! I think it would be easy enough; but you must promise to take him off my hands afterward. I am too fond of being entertained myself to do all the 'drawing.'"

George William Prescott, standing aloof against the supper room curtain, looked as lonely and as uncomfortable as he felt. His stilted replies to several maidens who had ventured inviting remarks regarding the evening, or the success of Mrs. Seymour's party, were not encouraged to further sociability. Alice, breathless, and startled-eyed, had suggested that supper would soon be served, and was allowed to drift on, to the escort of a braver and newly arrived man. George William, mentally reproached himself for leaving the assured entertainment of books for an uncertainty of enjoyment, when a laughing voice accosted him.

"I am your fate as supper companion," Cecelia informed him, "Being guest of honor, Mrs. Seymour gave me the privilege of choice, and I," Cissy Rose smiled, "I chose you." Mr. Prescott started to bow perfunctorily, then bending, drew her hand instead through his arm. Alice, at an opposite side of the flower decked table, gazed wonderingly at her admired one's evident enjoyment of the occasion. Once she heard in accompaniment to Cissy's merry glance at him, her daring use of the name, "Bill."

An eager light showed for a moment in the young man's eyes, his work was also his hobby, then from the doorway Cecelia looked back on the two, and George William turned, dazedly, to the shrinking figure at his side. But it was not of his beloved art that he spoke, "Cissy Rose," he repeated softly, "Why, you'd think the name was made for her, wouldn't you? With the rose color in her cheeks, and that sort of saucy way, she has—."

It was a long speech for William, which may have been accountable for the long silence that followed. From this silence Alice was only rescued by her former supper escort. "Hello," cried that young man breezily, "been looking for you everywhere. I want you to play a certain song for us. Oh! yes you will," he waved her shy objections aside, "I will sit on the bench beside you and give my moral support."

Cissy was in despair. Also, she began to realize certain alarming symptoms of timidity upon her own part at the approach of Bill Prescott.

"I love you!" declared the man whose timidity Alice had deplored.

"You love me, Cissy Rose, and we are going to be married." "Mercy!" gasped Cissy, her trembling fingers were promptly imprisoned in a masterful grasp.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE

Whereas, default has been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage executed and delivered by George I. Schmitz and Mame Schmitz his wife, mortgagors, to Martin Bozdeck as mortgagee, upon and covering the following described real estate situate in the County of Pennington, State of Minnesota, to-wit:

The northeast quarter (NE¼) of Section eleven (11) in township one hundred and fifty three (153) north of Range forty (40) west of the fifth principal meridan in Minnesota, containing one hundred and sixty acres more or less according to the Government survey thereof, and which said mortgage bears date the 1st day of November A. MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of One Hundred Eighty-two and 40-100 ($182.40) Dollars, interest, which is claimed to be due and is due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage duly executed and delivered by Edward Johnson and M. E. Johnson, his wife, Mortgagors, to Milo G. Drake and Elsie F. Drake Mortgagees, bearing date the 19th day of July, 1918, and with a Power of sale therein contained duly recorded in the Office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Pennington and State of Minnesota, on the 12th day of December, 1918, at 8 o'clock A. M., in book 58 of Mortgages on page 543.

And whereas, the said Mortgagors having failed to pay the taxes on said land and having failed to pay insurance premiums upon insurance policies covering the improvements upon said real estate and having failed to pay the interest on prior mortgages according to the terms of said mortgage, and the mortgagees having been obliged to pay and having paid the sum of Five Hundred Five and 78-100 ($505.78) Dollars, as interest on prior mortgages, premium on insurance policies and costs of foreclosure of prior mortgages.

And whereas, the said Mortgagees have duly elected and do hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice under the terms and conditions of said mortgage and the power of sale therein contained; and whereas, there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice, the sum of Four Thousand Two Hundred Eighty-eight and 18-100 ($4 288.18) Dollars, and whereas, the power of sale has become operative, and no action or proceedings having been instituted at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof;

NOW THEREFORE, NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That by virtue of the Power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the Statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, to-wit: The Southwest Quarter of Southeast Quarter (SE¼SE¼) of Section Thirty-three (33), and the South Half of the Southwest Quarter (S½SW¼) and the Northeast Quarter of the Southwest Quarter (NE¼SW¼) of Section Thirty-four (34) all in Township One Hundred Fifty-three (153) North of Range Forty-four (44) West; also the South Half of the Northwest Quarter (S½NW¼) and the South Half of the Northeast Quarter (S½NE¼) and Lots One (1), Two (2), Three (3), and Four (4) of Section Five (5) all in Township One Hundred Fifty-two (152) North of Range Forty-four (44) West of the Fifth Principal Meridian, Pennington County, Minnesota, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Pennington County, Minnesota, at the front door of the Court House in the City of Thief River Falls, Pennington County, Minnesota, on the 14th day of January, 1922, at 10 o'clock A. M. of that day, at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash to pay the said debt of Four Thousand Two Hundred Eighty-Eight and 18-100 ($4288.18) Dollars and interest and the taxes, if any, on said premises and Seventy-five ($75.00) Dollars Attorney's fees, as stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure and the disbursements allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale as by law provided. ROBERT'S CAREER LAID OUT

Indiana Youngster Has at Least Some of the Qualities That Distinguish the Politician.

Several Franklin mothers were watching their children intently for indications of their future calling. One was certain her son would be a second Caruso, while another was undecided as whether her son was to be an Edison or a Henry Ford. Mrs. D., however, had been unable to discover any genius in her three-year-old son, Robert, until recently. Robert came running in from play and said:

"Mother, there is a great big fish down there on the sidewalk this long," measuring a full yard length with his chubby hands.

"Why," said his mother, "if it is that long, it must be a snake."

"Yes," he replied, "I think it is mother. Want me to take you to see it?"

"Yes," said mother, and they hurried to the scene. On arrival they saw a good-sized fishing worm.

"Now," said the mother proudly to the other mothers, "I have at last discovered his calling."

"Why, what?" they hesitatingly asked.

"Why, can't you see," she said, beamingly, "that he has in him the making of a first-rate politician?"—Indianapolis News.

Good Word for the Boll Weevil.

Mainly to the boll-weevil, and to a less extent to the exigencies of the war, we owe the fact that a cotton equal if not superior to that grown anywhere in the world is being produced in Arizona, where, in the Salt River valley, 28,000 acres of cream-colored bulbs now bloom with cotton fiber that averages one and eleven-sixteenth inches in length.

Cotton production in the Salt River valley plantation has increased from 15,000 bales in 1917 to 37,000 bales last year. It is expected that the output in 1920 will be 50,000 bales, which will be about one-eighth of the total production to be used in the manufacture of automobile tires.

This effort would probably not have been made for many years if it had not been for the fact that the cotton crop of the South sea islands had been destroyed by the boll-weevil. The success of the domestic efforts in this direction was largely due to private enterprise.

Tunnel Ventilation Tried.

The test of the ventilation system in a model vehicular tunnel, a replica of the proposed Hudson River tunnel from New York to Jersey City, conducted at the experimental mine of the United States bureau of mines at Bruceton, near Pittsburgh, was considered a success by the bureau's officials and members of the New Jersey Bridge and Tunnel commission who attended.

Experiments were made to determine the effects of motor exhaust gases, the heat and the smoke, and the best methods of eliminating all such effects on motorists in tunnels.

Discovered at Last.

A change in the function of the pituitary body, one of the smallest of the ductless glands, which is about the size of a pea and is hidden on the underside of the brain, is responsible for the increase of divorce, according to Dr. Ernest E. Tucker, of New York.

This statement was made at the annual convention of the American Osteopathic Association of America. The growing wealth of the country and the increased standard of living is partly responsible for the change of function in the gland and also contributed to the divorce epidemic.

INDIANS GIVING UP MOCCASIN

Many Reasons Why the Red Men Are Taking to the Footgear of the White Race.

Because of a scarcity of proper leather from which to manufacture footwear, and the availability of store shoes, Indian moccasin making will soon be a lost art.

Throughout the Northwest the fringe-bordered and bead-bedecked Indian moccasin is rapidly being substituted by the white man's shoe. The high-laced shoe is a favorite with both sexes. For hunting and fishing the 1921 "warrior" prefers a hobnailed knee-high logger's boot.

The aboriginal moccasin fabric was mouse hide for cold weather in the Northwest; buffalo hide with the hair on for winter on the plains; buckskin for all general purposes, and later on beef hide in place of the disappearing skins.

In one fabric of the other were distinct tribal models with historical events drawn in bead work. The Crow, Sioux and Blackfoot Indian shoes possessed a hard rawhide sole to ward off stubby grass and pebbles.

In the snowy regions of the northwest the moccasin had soft soles that would admit of the use of the snowshoe.

Tourists who have been searching for various makes of moccasins declares some of the Northwest tribes have entirely eliminated moccasins. That the historic shoe of the American native may not become extinct, the University of Washington will attempt to collect specimens of moccasins as made by every aboriginal tribe on the North American continent. An expedition has left to begin the collecting of the footwear.

GOT EVIDENCE FROM GRAVE

Chinese Tomb Two Hundred Years Old Opened to Prove Contention as to Ownership.

As a means of adjusting a difference between Chinese litigants who appeared in the mixed court at Shanghai recently, the court directed that a grave mound 200 years old should be opened.

The dispute concerned the ownership of a small tract of ground. In the action, Sung Chul-Dong alleged that Yih Woo-Zoong invaded the premises under controversy and erected a bamboo fence around certain graves thereon, asserting that the place was his ancestral burying ground.

The plaintiff claimed the property as his own by ancestral grant.

When the grave mounds were opened, there were brought to light the tablets of a Chinese and his wife who had lived and died under the reign of the Emperor K'ang Hsi.

When the tablets were brought to court it was found that the characters on them were of peculiar form and the writing read from left to right instead of from top to bottom, but the inking was clear and the placques were well preserved.

After the reading of the tablets, the court announced the graves as those of the defendant's family and Sung's petition was dismissed.

Improved Sewing Machine.

A sewing machine that will do the family darning has now been patented, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. Its essential feature is a steel arm which carries the intricate mechanism controlling the shuttle and feed. This is increased in a ball at the end of the arm. In this way about twenty parts have been eliminated, making maintenance less expensive, and because of its simplicity, requiring less power to run. In darning, the bedplate covers over the ball and arm are removed, and the sock is drawn over the ball and along the arm. This construction also permits the sewing and mending of various other articles that require circular seaming.

GREATEST OF ALL CLEANERS

Steel Wool, a New Agent, Said to Remove Dirt, Smooth and Polish at Same Time.

The watermarks on porcelain tubs, discolorations on a cherished piece of aluminum, food burned on an enamel pan, a collection of grease in the crevices of nickel stove trimmings, or spatters of paint on the windows of the new house may all be removed by the same cleaner. A spongelike handful of steel wool will do the work for you.

This new cleaning agent is composed of very fine particles and strands of steel, wooled together in a soft mass like cotton. Enough friction is produced by rubbing the steel over the surface to be cleaned to remove all dirt and grease, but the soft mass of fibers prevents any scratching and helps to collect the dirt. You will be surprised after using a handful of steel wool to find that it cleans, smooths and polishes at the same time. Try it on the stove, and note the soft, clean polish which results.

Steel wool can now be procured in several grades, according to the coarseness of the strands. The first grade may be used to remove discolorations and burnt food from copper, enamel or aluminum vessels. Soak a piece of the wool in warm water and rub well with a nonalakali soap. Use as you would any polishing cloth and your pans will take on a satiny luster.

ASPHALT SHINGLES.

Asphalt shingles have been for some time made tapered in exactly the same manner as wood shingles. They have many advantages over the ordinary untapered asphalt shingles. Their exposed portion is almost three times as heavy as the standard nine-ounce asphalt shingle, the butt weighing eight ounces, whereas in the standard shingle it weighs only three ounces. They can be laid over an old wood-shingled roof, and the heavy butt holds the shingle down to the roof and seals it there. Thus labor is saved and additional insulation afforded.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

GONE IS "PERFECT 36."

The perfect 36 is no more, declares the Milwaukee Journal. In the days of her prime, before flappers owned their own cigarettes, she flourished. Now she is gone, say corsetieres. In her place is the willowy creature with a figure like a twelve-year-old boy and dresses that are suspended from sharp shoulders.

"The fashionable figure now," says one, "is smaller than the 36, more undeveloped. The stylish girl accentuates this thin, wispy appearance."

POULTRY CACKLES

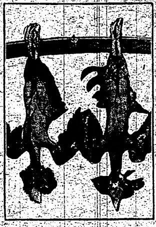
PREPARING MARKET POULTRY

Fowls Should Not Be Given Any Hard Feed From Eighteen to Twenty-four Hours Before Killing.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Poultry should be kept without any hard feed from eighteen to twenty-four hours before killing, but a light meal of soft feed can be given up to twelve hours before killing. Water should be given them up to time for killing, say poultry specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture. When ready to kill, suspend the fowl by the legs and, using a knife, cut the vein at the back of the throat through the mouth. As soon as this vein is cut run the point of the knife through the roof of the mouth into the brain and give the knife a slight turn, which causes the bird to lose all sense of feeling.

In most markets dry-picked birds are preferred. Immediately after killing, while the birds are still bleeding, the picker should remove the feathers, being careful not to tear the skin. If the picker waits until the bird is partly cold, the feathers will be difficult to remove. As soon as picked the fowls should be hung in a cool place until thoroughly cold. If the weather is warm and fowls are to be packed in ice where no cold storage is available, they should be placed in a tank of ice water until all the animal heat has left the body.



Capons Properly Dressed for Market.

When birds are scalded before removing the feathers they are immersed in hot water, which should be a little below the boiling point, as soon as they are through bleeding. They should be immersed three or four times and then picked clean. Be careful not to overscald, as this will cause the outer surface of the skin to rub off. If fowls are to be shipped dry, they should be hung up until the skin becomes thoroughly dry. If they are to be packed in ice, they should be left in cold water several hours or until they are to be packed.

TEACHING CHICKS TO ROOST

Difficult to Keep Young Fowls Clean When Permitted to Remain on the Floor.

It is often advisable to teach the chicks to roost when 8 to 12 weeks of age, say poultry specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture. When they are allowed to remain on the floor, it is difficult to keep them clean and to keep them from crowding. If wide roosts—3 to 4 inches—are used, there is but little, if any, more danger of crooked breasts than if the chicks are allowed to remain on the floor.

The chicks can generally be taught to roost by putting the perches near the floor, but if this plan is inconvenient or does not prove effective the chicks may be placed on the perches after dark for a few nights until they have learned to go there of their own accord. Where a large number of chicks are brooded together around a brooder stove it is a good plan to place roosts in the house when the chicks are four to five weeks old, so that the larger and stronger chicks will start using the roosts while the weaker chicks still stay around the brooder hover.

POULTRY NOTES

Don't see how many chicks you can hatch out, but rather how many you can raise at a profit.

Keep the poultry, as well as all other living things on the farm, on good terms with you by keeping on good terms with them.

There is mighty little money in fowls that are always kept hungry, but there is also a difference between well-fed and overfed hens.

* * *

Don't try to see how many fowls you can keep, but how well you can keep them. Don't overcrowd your houses. [illegible] crowding is dangerous.

HINDU WOMEN AWAKING.

The feminist movement among the Hindus is less organized and less advanced than in any other country, but there are many evidences that it is progressing rapidly. Many influential Hindus and Mohammedans have taken up the cause and are making it a part of their program of national liberties. The men who went into the war saw women moving about freely in France, and when they returned they brought back new ideas. The women during their absence had answered the call to arms—they had entered the workshops and hospitals. The war thus enlarged their outlook on life.

Some Peculiar Trees.

Among the many peculiar trees of Australia are found the flame-trees, rising nearly 100 feet; the fire-trees, the only tree that blossoms scarlet red; and Indian figs, a wonderful lofty tree of graceful form and brilliant color.

Soapmakers.

In the village of Kineton, Warwickshire, England, the women save all the pieces of fat and make soap in their homes. They supply the whole village with soap, both for toilet and household purposes.

DISCUSSING NORA

By MOLLIE MATHERS.

Copyright, 1921, Western Newspaper Union.

They were in the sun room, while out where the scarlet sage made a glory around her, sat Nora.

"This," remarked a determined-looking woman, "is the most reckless thing that she has done. I must confess to having been more or less shocked all along at Nora's actions. She is what one might call independently reckless. Of course, I don't believe all that I hear about her throwing this one and that one over. It is more likely that the Wilkin's man, for instance, did not reach a state of proposal. Eligible young men are not so easily cast aside. But it is certain, that Nora went around with him here a lot."

A red haired, and very young girl spoke up from a corner.

"Ted Wilkins was crazy about Nora," she said defiantly, "anyone could see that. So are all her admirers—and every man who comes here is an admirer of her's, open or secretly. But money doesn't move Nora Barron, or charm, or anything. She's just friendly with them all, and a mighty good friend at that. I ought to know I've been with her enough."

Mrs. Gladden stared at the girl coldly.

"You are too young to judge, Helene," she reproved, "or to join in discussion."

The young girl bent to her knitting.

"Some discussion," she remarked succinctly.

Mrs. Benton continued the topic.

"Ever since I came to this hotel," she said, "it has been one man or another with that girl, driving or walking or singing in turn. And she is utterly indifferent to criticism. Strangers to her, these men are, yet dancing attendance after an evening's acquaintance. And Nora is old enough to know better. Much older, I really believe than most of us think. This latest episode of her's, however, is positively reckless. Going about day and night with a stable groom—a hotel stable groom.

Helene gazed meditatively out of the window.

"Gee!" she mused, "he's handsomer than any movie hero I know; tall, and dark and—dandy."

"My dear," corrected Helene's mother, "you have caught Nora's foolish enthusiasm, and, I am afraid some of her views. Keep them to yourself."

"The man has completely fascinated Nora," said Mrs. Gladden.

"Her aunt, Mrs. Barron insists that she will have not one penny of her money if she continues in her friendship with the interloper.

"I," said Mrs. Gladden virtuously, "have done all I could to influence the young man against it; assured him, when he was driving my car one day, and I entered casually but purposely into conversation, that Nora acted in precisely this same manner to every new young man who came to the hotel, and that he, the Larry person, was not considered by her apart from his usefulness. The young man had the impertinence to laugh in my face and tell me I was mistaken."

"Knows of course," sighed Mrs. Benton, "of Nora's complete infatuation. I, instead, endeavored to bring her to her senses. Showed her the impossibility of the situation. But it was of no use. Nora snubbed me directly; picked up her book and left the room."

"Someone else is going to leave the room right now," said Helene explosively, and she went out to the garden, crossing deliberately to Nora, among the scarlet blossoms. Helene dropped down on the grass at her friend's side.

"For the love of Mike, Nora," she exclaimed, "tell me whether you are in love with that handsome driver or not. And if you are, what you intend to do about it. Those cats," she shrugged back toward the hotel, "are having a great time speculating. Will you really lose every cent of your Aunt Barron's money if you insist on marrying?"

Nora smiled.

"I suppose so," she answered cheerfully, "but what matter?"

The very young girl stared wonderingly.

"So that's love," she remarked.

"You do love him, and so you don't care about anything else."

"He is worth loving," Nora said softly, her brown eyes deepened in tenderness. "Larry has tried long and patiently to know me better, and to teach me to know him. But I missed a lot of my youth, Helene; it has only been on outings like this, that I came to know people at all. So, when Larry tried after our brief meeting in the Hills, where we were guests last summer, to call upon me later in the city, he was repeatedly refused and conceived therefore, this idea of playing groom at the Cliff hotel, where we are safe from aunt's surveillance and naturally, occasionally be thrown upon each other's companionship. He intended in this way to teach me to love him."

"And he has," cried Helene delightedly.

Nora's arm slipped round the girl's shoulders.

"We are going in to the city to be married tomorrow," she confided, "and when you hear, don't worry about my lost fortune. Lawrence [illegible]

TWO INJURED BY SHOTGUN CHARGE

Rux Boys Have Narrow Escape From Sudden Death Yesterday.

Arthur and Elmer Rux, sons of Mr. and Mrs. Dave Rux, had a lucky escape from death in a peculiar accident yesterday afternoon. The boys were going for a load of hay and carried with them a loaded shotgun. Coming to the stack, they set the gun on the ground leaning it against the rack. Elmer had just got on the stack and pitched a forkful of hay onto the rack when the gun, in some unaccountable manner, discharged. The charge passed thru Arthur's hand tearing away the tendons and crushing the bones under the little finger joint. Elmer, who was in direct line, was peppered in the shoulder and also got some shots in the head. Two or more pellets passed thru his ear and lodged under the skin of the head.

Dr. Bjerken made a flying trip out to the Rux place in response to a phone call appraising him of the accident. He dressed the wounds and took precautions to prevent any complications setting in.

Gets State Aid

The Pennington County Agricultural Society this week received a check from the state for $1564.00 as its share of the state appropriation made for such societies. The amount of appropriation is based on the amount of premiums paid by the societies at county fairs. The largest amount that can be paid is 1700.00 The largest amount received by any society in the state is the same as that received by this county.

Social Action and Affection.

Among the delusions which at different periods have possessed themselves of the minds of large masses of the human race, perhaps the most curious—certainly the least creditable—is the modern "soi-disant" science of political economy, based on the idea that an advantageous code of social action may be determined irrespectively of the influence of social affection.—Ruskin.

Great Things.

The gravest events dawn with no more noise than the morning star makes in rising. All great developments complete themselves in the world, and modestly wait in silence, praising themselves never, and announcing themselves not at all. We must be sensitive, and sensible, if we would see the beginnings and endings of great things.—Beecher.

Auditory Nerves.

The action of the ear is this. A sound is transmitted from some position, causing a disturbance in the air. This disturbance is collected by the outer ear, passed down the connecting passage, and strikes the skin of the drum, causing it to vibrate. The drum in turn communicates its vibrations to the oval window. Thence they travel to the liquid of the inner ear, and the hearing nerve gathers them up and transmits them to the brain.

Citation for Hearing on Final Account and for Distribution.

State of Minnesota, County of Pennington, ss. In Probate Court.

In the Matter of the Estate of John L. Durbin, Decedent.

The State of Minnesota, To Russell Durbin, Dale Durbin, Mina Bush, Ruth Kelly, Daisy Ballinger, Bernice Ballinger and all persons interested in the final account and distribution of the estate of said decedent: The representative of the above named decedent, having filed in this Court his final account of the administration of the estate of said decedent, together with his petition praying for the adjustment and allowance of said final account and for distribution of the residue of said estate to the persons thereunto entitled. Therefore, You and Each of You, are hereby cited and required to show cause, if any you have, before this Court, at the Probate Court Rooms in the Court House in the City of Thief River Falls in the County of Pennington State of Minnesota, on the 19th day of December 1921 at ten o'clock A. POULTRY FLOCKS

EGGS FROM BACK YARD FLOCK

Owner Should Be Satisfied With No Less Than Ten Dozen Eggs Per Hen, Say Experts.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The average novice can reasonably expect to get an average of at least ten dozen eggs per hen a year from his small flock in the back yard, say poultry specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture. On the basis of two hens to each member of the family this will give 20 dozen eggs a year to each person, which amount is about half way between the general average of farm and city consumption. No back-yard poultry keeper should be satisfied with less than this. He should try, however, to get as much more as possible.

To provide an egg a day for each person two hens would have to lay 183 eggs each a year. This is by no means an impossible average for small flocks. It is perhaps not too much to say that in case, where the person attending the flock is in a position to look after the wants of the birds three or more times a day an average of better than thirteen dozen eggs per hen can be secured if the hens are mature and in good condition at the start, and have the vitality to carry them through a year of heavy laying.

A Common Mongrel Back Yard Flock.

For the farm the average of 100 eggs per hen is advised as the lowest that should be accepted as satisfactory, while for the back yard 120 is insisted upon as the lowest average, although in general the conditions in back yards are less favorable to poultry keeping than on farms.

WHY CULLING IS PROFITABLE

Unculled Flock of 992 Hens Laid 3,576 Eggs in Week and 3,520 With 79 Taken Out.

An unculled flock of 992 hens laid 3,576 eggs in the week before being culled. Seventy-nine weak layers were cast out. The culled flock of 913 came right back the next week with a record of 3,520 eggs, while the 79 culls, living under precisely similar conditions, and doing their very best, were laying only 85 eggs. The market value of the eggs layed by the culls was around $3.50. The cost of feed alone for them at a cent a day for each hen was $5.53 for the week. Figures like these, say the poultry specialists at the university farm, show the importance of keeping only the best layers. Lessons driven home in the farm bureau's and extension division's campaign for frequent culling of flocks should put thousands of dollars in the pockets of poultry raisers.

GEESE ARE QUITE PECULIAR

Different From Other Fowls as They Must Be Mated Previous to Breeding Season.

Geese are peculiar animals. They ought to be mated several months prior to the breeding season to obtain the best results; therefore breeding stock should be bought in the fall, and all changes in matings made then. Matings are not changed from year to year unless results are unsatisfactory. And this is the peculiar feature of it. If the matings are changed, it is necessary, usually, to keep the previously mated geese so far apart they cannot hear each other.

POULTRY NOTES

Keep lime always in reach, plenty of gravel or grit and a good dry dust bath for the fowls.

Give the growing stock all they want to eat. They won't pay unless they grow, and they can't grow unless well fed.

Separate the males and females. Both will stand the hot summer weather better if separated, and the eggs will also keep better.

Hens need fresh water as much as do horses. During these hot summer days they will suffer greatly unless they have constant access to it.

The farmer who fails to save some of his choicest second-growth clover for the hens during the winter will miss one of the best egg-producing feeds we have.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE.

Whereas, default has been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage executed and delivered by George L. Schmitz and Mame Schmitz his wife, mortgagors, to Martin Bozdeck as mortgagee, upon and covering the following described real estate situate in the County of Pennington, State of Minnesota, to-wit:

The northeast quarter (NE¼) of Section eleven (11) in township one hundred and fifty three (153) north of Range forty (40) west of the fifth principal meridan in Minnesota, containing one hundred and sixty acres more or less according to the Government survey thereof, and which said mortgage bears date the 1st day of November A. D. 1916, and was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for said county of Pennington, State of Minnesota on the 30th day of June A. D. 1917, at 5 o'clock P. M. in book 57 of mortgages on page 133, and

Whereas said default consists in the failure of the said mortgagors to pay the sum of one hundred and ninety two dollars, interest due upon the principal sum of thirty two hundred dollars, and whereas, by virtue of the terms and conditions of the said mortgage the said mortgagee has elected to declare the whole sum secured by said mortgage due and payable, and

Whereas, there is actually due and claimed to be due at the date of this mortgage the sum of three thousand and four hundred dollars, and no action having been instituted to recover the same or any part thereof,

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that under and pursuant to the power of sale therein contained and the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed and the real property therein described will be sold at public auction to the highest bidder for cash, by the sheriff of Pennington County, Minnesota, at the front door of the Court House in the City of Thief River Falls, in said Pennington County on Tuesday the 10th day of January A. D. 1922, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of said day to pay the amount which shall then be due upon said mortgage and the costs of foreclosure thereof including the sum of seventy five dollars attorney's fees as stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure thereof, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale as provided by law.

Is This Cruel and Unusual?

Chinese "safety first" sponsors have hit upon a drastic method of punishment in the effort to minimize deaths and accidents, due to reckless operation of motor cars, in the suggestion of imprisonment, for offenders in a room with a wax figure of the victim. The Chinese Society for the Protection of Life has asked the Shanghai municipal council to adopt an ordinance prescribing the punishment, with the term of imprisonment left to the discretion of the court.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of One Hundred Eighty-two and 40-100 ($182.40) Dollars, interest, which is claimed to be due and is due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage duly executed and delivered by Edward Johnson and M. E. Johnson, his wife, Mortgagors, to Milo G. Drake and Elsie F. Drake Mortgagees, bearing date the 19th day of July, 1918, and with a Power of sale therein contained duly recorded in the Office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Pennington and State of Minnesota, on the 12th day of December, 1918, at 8 o'clock A. M., in book 58 of Mortgages on page 543.

And whereas, the said Mortgagors having failed to pay the taxes on said land and having failed to pay insurance premiums upon insurance policies covering the improvements upon said real estate and having failed to pay the interest on prior mortgages according to the terms of said mortgage, and the mortgagees having been obliged to pay and having paid the sum of Five Hundred Five and 78-100 ($505.78) Dollars, as interest on prior mortgages, premium on insurance policies and costs of foreclosure of prior mortgages.

And whereas, the said Mortgagees have duly elected and do hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice under the terms and conditions of said mortgage and the power of sale therein contained; and whereas, there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice, the sum of Four Thousand Two Hundred Eighty-eight and 18-100 ($4 288.18) Dollars, and whereas, the power of sale has become operative, and no action or proceedings having been instituted at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof;

NOW THEREFORE, NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That by virtue of the Power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the Statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, to-wit: The Southeast Quarter of Southeast Quarter (SE¼SE¼) of Section Thirty-three (33) and the South Half of the Southwest Quarter (S½SW¼) and the Northeast Quarter of the Southwest Quarter (NE¼SW¼) of Section Thirty-four (34) all in Township One Hundred Fifty-three (153) North of Range Forty-four (44) West; also the South Half of the Northwest Quarter (S½NW¼) and the South Half of the Northeast Quarter (S½NE¼) and Lots One (1), Two (2), Three (3), and Four (4) of Section Five (5) all in Township One Hundred Fifty-two (152) North of Range Forty-four (44) West of the Fifth Principal Meridian, Pennington County, Minnesota, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Pennington County, Minnesota, at the front door of the Court House in the City of Thief River Falls, Pennington County Minnesota, on the 14th day of January, 1922, at 10 o'clock A. M. of that day, at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash to pay the said debt of Four Thousand Two Hundred Eighty-Eight and 18-100 ($4288.18) Dollars, and interest and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and Seventy-five ($75.00) Dollars Attorney's fees, as stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure and the disbursements allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale as provided by law.

CONQUERING LEPROSY.

Leprosy, most dread disease, is being conquered by the chaulmoogra oil treatment. First successful at Honolulu, it is being tried in Japan, which has 100,000 lepers.

Dr. T. Hoyoshima, head of the medical college at Kyoto, Japan, says that the treatment is so successful that his patients within a few months lose all external evidences of the disease.

Lepers once were stoned and cast out. That a cure has nearly been perfected is due to medical men, mostly Americans, who braved the disease for experimentation. Do you know of a greater form of heroism?

THE BARE BACK AGAIN.

Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont was entertaining the leaders of the National Woman's party at her Newport residence.

"I met a movie man the other day," she said. "He urged me to help him banish the movie censor. He declared:

" 'The movies need no censor, madam. They are the very backbone of American art.'

" 'The last movie I attended,' I said, 'it seemed to me that there was a little too much backbone.' "

HONOR WRITER'S MEMORY.

Flowers That Sleep at Night.

There are many wild flowers that close their petals and droop their heads with the coming of each day's dusk, and it is unreasonable to regard this as other than the sober fact which it obviously is—that the flowers have fallen asleep with the approach of night.

Making a Storm.

Looking at a wind and rain storm on the screen, does everyone know that the wind is made by a large truck with propellers in front that whirl at a terrific speed while high overhead a hose pours down the driving rain?—New York Evening Post.

Question of Influence.

The secret of success, according to a Kansas City minister, is to be born without money, friends or influence. Many are born without money, a few without friends, but we never heard of a baby without influence.—Kansas City Star.

Height of Aurora Borealis.

A Norwegian scientist, M. Stormer, was able to have photographed at several points in his country, the aurora borealis seen last May, which upset telegraph lines and cables and provided a gorgeous display in many parts of the world.

Comparing these photographs in relation to known stars photographed at the same time, he has calculated the height at which this aurora borealis was spread forth—namely, 312½ miles.

Thus, since the aurora borealis is by proof an electrical illumination of the rarified air gases, the earth's atmosphere extends at least that distance above the earth's surface.—Detroit News.

HOW FISH KEEP WATER PURE

Have Been Found of Immense Value as Scavengers in Some Reservoirs in England.

It is sometimes supposed that fish injure the purity of drinking water. This can be shown to be the very reverse of the truth. In the case of certain English reservoirs that became foul and impure it was found that the introduction of the brown trout, or in a few cases the introduction of perch and other coarse fish, purified the water.

The reasons are easily understood. Fish, even trout, are a kind of scavenger. Frogs and frog spawn will greatly pollute reservoirs. Fish eat frogs and keep down the numbers of frogs to the very minimum. Worms, grasshoppers, beetles and other forms of life are washed in immense quantities into city reservoirs. If many fish are present, these things will be promptly eaten and before contaminating the water.

In the case of several English reservoirs all fish life had been netted out. Soon frogs became innumerable, weeds grew until the shallows were masses of weeds and filled with dying insect life. A few thousand brown trout introduced into such water, and frogs disappear, with the filthy frog spawn, weeds become less plenty, and before long the water is far purer than before.

Also scientists have claimed that the constant agitation of the water by fish and the taking of the water through the gills of fish both have a tendency to increase the purity of the water.—Ladd Plumley, in the Outlook.

LUXURIOUS TRAVELING.

Electrification having done away with the cinder, gas and smoke horror that goes with steam-propelled railway trains, it is possible for a great western railroad to adopt an ideal open-air observation car on part of its route. The car is built similar to a sleeping car, except that there is no upper berth, the lower seat only being constructed sectionally and allowed the usual Pullman space. A roof covers the central part of the car and is built to leave an uncovered platform at each end. Between the seat compartments glass windshields are installed to prevent the sweep of uncomfortable drafts when the car is moving swiftly.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Anna's Merciless Critic

By CORONE REMINGTON

(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

It was not surprising that Anna Terhune should try writing for the movies. Everybody but the entirely illiterate and the abjectly lazy has tried it, is trying it or is going to try it tomorrow. Most folks experiment in film fiction because they fancy themselves a bit clever.

Anna, however, was prompted to that endeavor only because she was sure she was a little less stupid and a good deal less badly educated than Hazel Hazelhurst; and Hazel, so all Hillsburg was one morning informed by the Herald, had written and sold to the Imperial Films company a scenario called "Flaming Swords and Bleeding Hearts." Afterward Anna had seen the film herself, with the subtitle, "Story by Hazel Hazelhurst," as big as life.

It was an amazing thing to Anna, because Hazel, a spinner girl in the silk mill where Anna was a stenographer, had left school of her own volition at thirteen and was the kind of girl who talks slang exclusively, chews gum on the streets and goes to 10-cent dances.

If it were really true that inarticulate people like that could get hundreds and hundreds of dollars for just tacking together a few ideas and sending them to a film company, then Anna felt she was doing herself an absolute injustice by not trying her hand at this fairy game of chance. She would do it.

Wherefore, within the next six weeks, Anna by dint of much mental toil evolved three stories. Each was neatly typed and dispatched to the Colossal Photoplays company, at New York. And each, about a week after its departure, came back as unerringly as a homing pigeon. With each was enclosed the same printed form, stating that the Colossal company "regrets that the material submitted is not exactly suited to its present needs."

It was just at this time that the National Fabrics company decided to close down its Hillsburg plant for two weeks for "readjustment purposes." Anna, receiving assurance from the manager that she would not be affected by the readjustment proceedings, found herself with a fortnight's vacation on her hands.

She determined that the way to discover something about this scenario game, meantime, was to go to the place where it is played. So she made the first trip of her life to the metropolis, procured as comfortable a furnished room as New York's fantastic prices made possible to her limited purse, and set out next day to "learn the game."

Anna expected to get speech with a couple of scenario editors, at least, and to obtain from them some words of advice and suggestion; also, probably, to secure permission to visit a studio or two and witness screen drama in the making. She went to the Colossal's establishment first.

From a red-headed typist at the portal of the scenario department Anna received disillusionment. The scenario editor wasn't to be seen. Nobody was to be seen, except by appointment. A million people a day wanted to see somebody about scenarios. Anyhow, Mr. Highland was out. The associate editor was out, too.

Anna was on the point of beating a discomfited retreat when Ted Maltby, under inspiration to have an early lunch, emerged from an inner room. Ted, one of the Colossal's keenest scenario readers, nevertheless was a departmental joke for his softness of heart toward the genus "writing nut." He stopped, looking inquiringly at the red-headed girl and toward Anna.

"'S lady wantsta see somebody 'bout script writin'," volunteered Red Head, vastly bored.

"Perhaps I can be of service," offered Tom. The proffer was made in sacrificial kindness, but as Anna Terhune's face lighted in acknowledgment Ted whistled, mentally, in delighted surprise. "A regular girl!" he inwardly congratulated himself—"after, oh, Lord, these many hundreds!" Then, to Anna, "I am one of the readers—Maltby."

Anna told him her name. "Of Hillsburg?" Ted asked. "I have read several of your scripts lately."

"Oh, I'm so glad!" exclaimed the girl. "Then you will be the very person to advise me. That's what I have come for, you know."

Maltby experienced the sudden sense of depression that comes to him who is unexpectedly called on to break the news to the family of the victim. "I shall be delighted," he managed to say, however. "I was just going over to Forty-fourth street for much coffee and little food. Would you care to come? It's a wonderful place to talk."

New York is not Hillsburg, even on one's first day. Anna, quite to her own astonishment, accepted the invitation with no more ceremony than had accompanied its extension. Ten minutes later they were sitting, in the camaraderie of old acquaintanceship, at a little undraped table in the presence of a negligible luncheon and miraculous Brazilian brew.

"Now," said Ted, "I'm going to play the heavy—just mere, plain brute. You've come to New York to get set right in this stunt of screen writing. You've had your scripts sent back and you've made up your mind to find the [illegible]

"Why, yes. And I'm glad you—"

"Wait," interrupted Ted. "You're not going to thank me; in a minute you're going to throw that coffee cup at my head, Miss Terhune"—Maltby's expression showed that he hated the task ahead of him—"I ask you to believe that I am animated by the sincerest, if quite sudden, friendship. There is only one thing for you to do about this work."

"I think I know what you are going to say," Anna interjected. "You're going to tell me I must start all over—begin at a beginning, somewhere—and learn the craft, just as any other must be learned."

"Wrong. Quite wrong. The only thing for you to do is to drop it. Quit it. Forget it. You'd never make a screen writer in a thousand years. There! I've said it—and mighty hard it was to say. I've read all the stories you've sent in. There's nothing the matter with them—except that they are hopeless. You're not a writer—I think you're a doer. You're not an imaginer of make-believe romances. If you'll pardon me, I think you're a million times more surely intended to live a real one. I don't believe you ever had any actual conviction that you could write—I can tell that from your stuff. I wish you would tell me just how you came to undertake it."

So kindly, so admiring, so ardently friendly and concerned were the big brown eyes of her merciless critic that Anna could feel no resentment. The only surprise she experienced was in not being surprised at all. And she told him, plump, about the Hazel Hazelhurst episode.

"My better judgment tells me you are wholly right, Mr. Maltby," she went on. "And yet how do you explain the success of that illiterate girl? If it were not for that one thing I could laugh at the whole idea—and devote the rest of my vacation to 'seeing New York' and having a good, wholesome time."

At the mention of the name Hazelhurst, Maltby had started imperceptibly. Now he looked at his companion for half a dozen long seconds before he answered. "I hate to spoil your Hillsburg celebrity's small glory," he said at length, "but in the person before you see the original and only Hazelhurst, author of 'Flaming Swords.' I alone am guilty of that atrocity—and my only excuse is that I needed the money. And you, Miss Terhune, aside from the lunatic who bought and produced it, alone know the shameful truth."

"Good gracious!" exclaimed Anna, "do you mean that that girl at home merely lied—claimed the picture when she saw the name in a movie magazine or somewhere?"

"Your imagination improves, Miss Terhune," grinned Ted.

"Do you know how I feel?" demanded Anna suddenly. "Well, I feel as though some one had lifted a ton weight off my shoulders. I'm going straight home and tear up those foolish manuscripts and give three cheers and go to a perfectly good show!"

"Why not make it the shops this afternoon and the show tonight?" supplemented Ted eagerly. "I—I'd mighty well like to take you."

As they parted at the Broadway corner it wasn't disappointment that went along with Anna—disappointment doesn't sing in your heart. And Ted Maltby, looking after her, said to himself: "Two weeks. Well, many a pippin of a story has been built in less than that."

Shepherd's Excuse.

Although shepherds have always been held to be poetical and reasonably righteous persons, they never have much opportunity to go to church and so when a shepherd in Sussex, Eng., dies, a lock of wool is put into the coffin, so that when their record is looked up on the judgment day they may present this supreme excuse, writes a correspondent. Sussex is rich in quaint superstitions. If there are any "wild feathers"—feathers from game birds—in a pillow one cannot "die easy" on it, but lingers on in pain. It is unlucky to sell bees, but if a price be paid it must be in gold or hay. When the head of the house dies the bees are "told" and a piece of crape hung on the hive.—Montreal Family Herald.

Seventy Pounds of Meteor a Minute.

Our planet is getting heavier and heavier! How does that happen? Because of the meteors that are constantly falling on it. You may not have seen any of them fall, but the earth is a large place. In a year eleven thousand four hundred and thirty-five tons of meteors fall! This gives an average of seventy pounds per minute.

Much of this tonnage comes in the form of fine meteoric dust that settles all over the earth. However, a large meteor—too big to burn on entering our atmosphere—falls occasionally. Several years ago one of them fell in Iowa and exploded on hitting the earth. Over five thousand pieces were picked up and some weighed over four hundred pounds.—Popular Science Monthly.

Limited Time.

Don't ever get the idea that Catalina island is a slow place. Had you been close to the rock where Big Ben hangs out, on a certain recent Sunday evening you would have overheard the following:

"Well, I might say never, but on [illegible] the return trip what you might [illegible]

POWER FROM VOLCANIC HEAT

Italian Industry Has Probably the Cheapest Motive Force in the Universe Today.

In central Tuscanny is a large electric powerhouse that obtains its initial driving power from volcanic heat. In the neighborhood are many cracks in the ground, from which powerful jets of very hot steam spout high into the air. Early experiments in using the steam for driving engines failed commercially, for the borax salts, sulphurated hydrogen and sulphuric acid in the steam, on account of the corrosive action, made necessary frequent repairs. The difficulty has been overcome by applying the steam, not directly, but to a boiler in place of fuel. So applied it produces steam in the boiler at a pressure of two atmospheres, which is then passed through a superheater and on to the steam turbine used for driving electric generators.

Prince Ginori-Conti, who financed the undertaking, has made three large installations on that system. One of 3,000-kilowatt units has been at work since January, 1916; the second since April of that year, and the third started not long ago. So far these groups have worked very well and have been a great boon to the industries of Tuscany, which have been under a great disadvantage owing to the scarcity and high price of coal. Since the volcanic region extends for many square miles around Darderello there is nothing to prevent the installations from being increased until they produce thousands of horsepower.

Waterfowl Peculiar.

The ways of the waterfowl are as strange as the ways of men. Not very long ago a matronly wild duck held up all traffic on Beacon street, in Boston, while she convoyed a large brood under the noses of the panting motors to a summer home in the Fenway. And now we have Lord Grey telling a Berwick audience of a wood-duck who built in a hollow elm 300 yards from the water. When the eggs were hatched, she flew down from the hole into the grass, and began to call. Thereupon the ducklings scrambled two feet up the inside of the tree to the mouth of the hole and then fell from there to the ground, a [illegible]

NEW RAILROAD IS PROPOSED

Cyrus Kilbuck, Millionaire Promotor, Locates Here.

Two routes are considered for the new line of the P. D. Q. railroad thru this section and land owners along the routes are anxious to know which one will be chosen.

Barnaby Bird has purchased considerable land, and Tony, son of the promotor, who has been expelled from college and turned out from home, has also invested in some local land.

Land sales are being made daily at Mrs. Beaver's boarding house. Attorney Mulberry, chief attorney, and Mrs. Van Dyke, purchasing agent for the road, are here looking after the Kilbuck interests. Kilbuck's office boy has a crush on the stenographer who is engaged to Brice Ferguson. Jessamine Lee, Tony's fiancee, double crosses Barnaby Bird in the big land deal.

The plot thickens, but—it will all turn out right in the end. All the above, and many other exciting climaxes will be brought out at the home talent play, "An Early Bird" at the Imperial Hall, Thursday evening, Dec. 15th. Everybody is going.

Cold Down South

Last Monday while a Chinook wind swept springlike breezes over Dakota and parts of this state, wintry weather prevailed in southern states. In Texas the mercury was around freezing and points all along from there to this section reported colder weather than prevailed here.

Broken Heart Social

A program and a broken heart social will be given in the A. Aug. Erickson school house on December 23rd. Girls are requested to bring a broken heart, and lunch for two. All are cordially invited and welcome.

Shortest Day

According to the calendar next Wednesday is the shortest day of the year, and Thursday is the first day of winter. It may be right in regard to the shortest day, but winter is still in the offing.

Christmas Seal sales have been brisk here the past few days. None escaped being offered opportunity to buy.

Will Confiscate Cars

Car owners in the Twin Cities and other parts of the state who have failed to pay their state tax for the last year, are being served with summons to appear and explain their failure to comply with the law. Garage owners and auto dealers who had either new or second hand cars for sale were not required to pay the tax until last fall, but many of them disregarded it even then. The state now proposes to either collect the taxes or sell the cars at sheriff sale to pay them. Any car owner in the state who failed to take out a license for 1921 will be unable to get a license for 1922, until the 1921 tax and penalty on same is paid.

Taxes for 1922 are payable any time between now and January 31st, after which they become delinquent and penalty is added at the rate of 25 cents a day until $7.50 is added.

Wide Sleigh Law

The so-called wide sleigh law in this state is held to be constitutional. The law provides that no sleighs less than the regulation width of 54 inches can be sold first hand in this state after January 1st, 1921. In other words, none but wide sleighs should now be on the market as the narrow width cannot legally be sold. The law does not apply to sleighs now in use, or to the sale of second hand ones where there is no attempt to evade the law.

Stores Closed

The Mathson stores at both Hazel and Highlanding are reported closed this week. Difficulty in making collections of outstanding accounts is given as the reason for closing a business that Mr. Mathson has spent many years in building.

A real western chinook wind strayed over this part of the state last Monday, playing havoc with the snow. The mercury was up around the forty mark almost all day. The snow is practically all gone on the high grades, and fields are showing up black again.

Fred Berg Passes

A particularly sad death occured Thursday last when Fred Berg, son of Mrs. Anna Berg, died at the family home northeast of town. About a year ago he suffered a severe attack of whooping cough which later developed into tubercuolsis. Last fall he went to Colorado thinking a change of climate might be of benefit, but he grew steadily worse, and realizing the end was near, he returned a few weeks ago to die in the home where he spent his childhood days, and where he grew to manhood.

Fred was a fine type of young man. His nature was such that he made friends easily, and he was held in high esteem by everyone in the community. Since the death of his father a few years ago, Fred has been the mainstay on the farm, shouldering more and more responsibilities as he grew older. His death is a sad blow to his widowed mother and the other children who depended so much on him and his efforts.

Funeral services were conducted by Rev. A. F. Nelson from the Swedish Lutheran church last Saturday and interment was made in the Swedish cemetery. Heartfelt sympathy of this community is extended to Mrs. Berg and family in their sad bereavement.

Burstad–Bottolfson

Last Thursday afternoon at the home of the bride's mother near Plummer, Miss Alma Burstad and Mickael Bottolfson of Garske, N. D., exchanged marriage vows in the presence of a number of relatives and friends. Rev. T. E. Sweger, pastor of the Trinity Lutheran church of Thief River, officiated. Miss Thea Burstad was bridesmaid, and Ben Mahla acted as best man.

The bride was charmingly gowned in white and carried a shower boquet of bride's roses and ferns. Following the ceremony, a bounteous four course dinner was served in the dining room which was tastily decorated for the occasion with pink and white carnations.

The birde, who grew to womanhood here, is an accomplished young lady of the younger set, and the groom is a prosperous young farmer in Dakota and Canada.

After a brief visit here with the bride's mother and brothers, with P. Burstad and family at St. Hilaire, and E. P. Burstad at Thief River Falls, they will leave for a visit with the groom's relatives after which they go to Garske, N. D., where they will make their future home.

DAIRY SCHOOL HERE FRIDAY

Illustrated Lecture Will Be Given At Afternoon Session.

L. V. Wilson, connected with the Extension Division of the University of Minnesota, will conduct a dairy school in this village on Friday this week. There will be a session in the forenoon at 10:30 when problems pertaining to the dairying industry will be discussed. This session is of especial importance to everyone engaged in dairying, and should be well attended. In the afternoon at 2:00 a film will be shown on the value of dairy products which are free from T. B. and other contagious diseases. As the general health of the community depends a great deal on the cleanliness of dairy products consumed, this lecture should be interesting to rural and village folks alike.

There is no charge for admission to either of the two sessions, and a cordial invitation to the public is extended by those in charge. The school, being of educational nature, should enjoy a packed house at both meetings.

Party For Pastor

The people of the St. Pauli church, Rev. C. M. Grimsrud's charge, had arranged a get-to-gether meeting in connection with the annual business meeting of the church last Monday. Men and women turned out en masse. A bountiful lunch was served in the basement of the church. The pastor was remembered with a "carload" of things besides a substantial sum of money.

WILL MEAN MUCH TO ARIZONA

New Mexican Harbor, Soon to Be Developed, of Vital Interest Also to Southwestern States.

The new Mexican harbor at Rocky Point, on St. George's bay, which, dispatches state, is to be developed very soon, will open to passenger traffic and commercial development a rich portion of the southwestern United States, as well as a part of the North American continent on the Gulf of California that is little known and explored, according to a bulletin of the National Geographic society from its Washington headquarters.

The Bay of St. George marks the northern limit of deep water in the Gulf of California, and when its new harbor is connected by a short spur of track with the railroad already in existence, there will be an all-water outlet through the Panama canal to eastern United States for the mines of Arizona. Once, just after the Civil war, the people of the Arizona mines had all their supplies brought them from California by water, the ships steaming down the California coast up the Gulf and the Colorado river to Yuma, and now it seems that the old method of handling their products will come into vogue again.

Spread of Dental Clinics.

According to returns received in reply to a questionnaire recently sent out by the United States bureau of education, 286 cities in the United States have established dental clinics in connection with their public school systems. These clinics receive support in 181 instances from the city boards of education; in 83 from the city health departments; in 22 from health departments and boards of education jointly, and in 60 from the Red Cross or private donations.

Massachusetts outranks all other states with respect to number of cities maintaining dental clinics, laying claim to 34 of the total of 286; then comes New York state with 23, New Jersey, 21; Illinois, 17; Michigan, Ohio and Wisconsin, 16 each; Indiana and Pennsylvania, 14 each; California, 11; Rhode Island, 8, and the remaining states from 7 to 8 each.

Not a Bad Description.

Alice was taken to a dance one evening. The next day, while playing with her playmates, her mother overheard her telling them about the dance. And this is the way she described it: "The papas put their arms around the mammas, and they just walked, and walked and walked."

He Couldn't.

The Orator—"Work, my friends, is the lot of man! Man was sent into this world to earn his living by the sweat of his brow. You didn't find Adam walking about the Garden of Eden with his hands in his pockets!"—The Passing Show (London).

Saturn Not So Large as Jupiter.

The planet Saturn is not quite so large as Jupiter. Its grand array of rings and satellites, however, renders it the most stupendous object in the solar system. To the naked eye, when near opposition, it shines as a bright star of the first magnitude.

Angling Made Easy.

A Californian keeps a lake properly stocked with fish where anglers may throw their line and fish to their hearts' content by paying a fee for each fish caught. It is much cheaper and just as much fun as taking a long trip into the country.

Woodpecker Tenacious.

The woodpecker does a good deal of looking around and thumping on hollow stubs before he locates his worm for breakfast; but after he does make up his mind, nothing on earth can drive him from his job.

The Oldest Science.

Astronomy has the glory of being the oldest of the sciences. It was by watching the spangled heavens that man first got his conception of an ordered universe, and from that the idea of other things governed by law.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE

Whereas, default has been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage executed and delivered by George L. Schmitz and Mamie Schmitz his wife, mortgagors, to Martin Bozdeck as mortgagee, upon and covering the following described real estate situate in the County of Pennington, State of Minnesota, to-wit:

The northeast quarter (NE¼) of Section eleven (11) in township one hundred and fifty three (153) north of Range forty (40) west of the fifth principal meridan in Minnesota, containing one hundred and sixty acres more or less according to the Government survey thereof, and which said mortgage bears date the 1st day of November A. D. 1916, and was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for said county of Pennington, State of Minnesota on the 30th day of June A. D. 1917, at 5 o'clock P. M. in book 57 of mortgages on page 133, and

Whereas said default consists in the failure of the said mortgagors to pay the sum of one hundred and ninety two dollars, interest due upon the principal sum of thirty two hundred dollars, and whereas, by virtue of the terms and conditions of the said mortgage the said mortgagee has elected to declare the whole sum secured by said mortgage due and payable, and

Whereas, there is actually due and claimed to be due at the date of this mortgage the sum of three thousand and four hundred dollars, and no action having been instituted to recover the same or any part thereof,

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that under and pursuant to the power of sale therein contained and the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed and the real property therein described will be sold at public auction to the highest bidder for cash, by the sheriff of Pennington County, Minnesota, at the front door of the Court House in the City of Thief River Falls, in said Pennington County on Tuesday the 10th day of January A. D. 1922, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of said day to pay the amount which shall then be due upon said mortgage and the costs of foreclosure thereof including the sum of seventy five dollars attorney's fees as stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure thereof, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale as provided by law.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of One Hundred Eighty-two and 40-100 ($182.40) Dollars, interest, which is claimed to be due and is due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage duly executed and delivered by Edward Johnson and M. E. Johnson, his wife, Mortgagors, to Milo G. Drake and Elsie F. Drake Mortgagees, bearing date the 19th day of July, 1918. and with a Power of sale therein contained duly recorded in the Office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Pennington and State of Minnesota, on the 12th day of December, 1918, at 8 o'clock A. M., in book 58 of Mortgages on page 543.

And whereas, the said Mortgagors having failed to pay the taxes on said land and having failed to pay insurance premiums upon insurance policies covering the improvements upon said real estate and having failed to pay the interest on prior mortgages according to the terms of said mortgage, and the mortgagees having been obliged to pay and having paid the sum of Five Hundred Five and 78-100 ($505.78) Dollars, as interest on prior mortgages, premium on insurance policies and costs of foreclosure of prior mortgages.

And whereas, the said Mortgagees have duly elected and do hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice under the terms and conditions of said mortgage and the power of sale therein contained; and whereas, there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice, the sum of Four Thousand Two Hundred Eighty-eight and 18-100 ($4 288.18) Dollars, and whereas, the power of sale has become operative, and no action or proceedings having been instituted at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof;

NOW THEREFORE, NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That by virtue of the Power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the Statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, to-wit: The Southeast Quarter of Southeast Quarter (SE¼SE¼) of Section Thirty-three (33) and the South Half of the Southwest Quarter (S½SW¼) and the Northeast Quarter of the Southwest Quarter (NE¼SW¼) of Section Thirty-four (34) all in Township One Hundred Fifty-three (153) North of Range Forty-four (44) West; also the South Half of the Northwest Quarter (S½NW¼) and the South Half of the Northeast Quarter (S½NE¼) and Lots One (1), Two (2), Three (3), and Four (4) of Section Five (5) all in Township One Hundred Fifty-two (152) North of Range Forty-four (44) West of the Fifth Principal Meridian, Pennington County, Minnesota, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Pennington County, Minnesota, at the front door of the Court House in the City of Thief River Falls, Pennington County Minnesota, on the 14th day of January, 1922, at 10 o'clock A. M. of that day, at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash to pay the said debt of Four Thousand Two Hundred Eighty-Eight and 18-100 ($4288.18) Dollars, and interest and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and Seventy-five ($75.00) Dollars Attorney's fees, as stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure and the disbursements allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale as provided by law.

History of Light

It is rightly said that the caveman lived in darkness! When he had any light at all, other than faint beams of the moon, it must have been a smoking torch of knotted, bark-covered wood or clay vessel filled with dry twigs ignited.

Cat-tails soaked in oil were the next step forward and it is likely that all early lamps were oil burners. Centuries spanned the whale-oil and the coal oil lamps and the gas light, burning natural gas, supplanted both. The gas mantel was a big improvement on the open gas burner, but the modern incandescent electric lamp surpasses any artificial light ever known to mankind. The newest electric bulbs are frosted to insure a soft, restful light.

What else in your home gives as steady service and as much comfort and convenience at little cost as electricity?

AN AWAKENING

By ISABELLE ENGLAND.

© 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

"Mary, darling," murmured Ted. "Love me lots? Hummm? Why, what's the trouble now— what the deuce—?" For his fiancee's expression had become anything but flattering. She looked, indeed, decidedly bored.

"You're a sweet boy," yawned Mary, "but really, you're horribly tiresome. One can be so sure of you. Oh, Ted! I do wish you weren't so faithful and adoring and—well—unthrilling. Now, if you'd only make love to Cynthia, next door, or something like that! I want excitement, and freedom. I want to be kidnapped by a big, bad man with rough hands, and be pulled by the hair, and kissed brutally, until—Oh-h-h-h——!"

Ted regarded her, open-mouthed, with a half-dazed, incredulous expression. Then his face hardened.

"I'm sorry," he retorted, sneeringly, no longer the meek and perfect lover, but a very angry boy. "Sorry I had the great misfortune be born respectable. Sorry I'm not a ruffian. Drag you by the hair, eh? A spanking would be more effective!"

Mary smiled, maddeningly.

"Of course you can't comprehend my feelings! Your life is so shallow, so petty. Your highest ambition is to marry me. Ye gods! What have I done to deserve such a fate. If you were half a man, you'd abuse me once in a while, or do something to make life interesting."

"Mary!" Startled, but once more adoring, he knew not what to say.

"Anyhow, don't stand there gazing at me with that adoring, calf-like expression!" she scolded.

Ted was all at sea. His dignity had been completely swept away. He appeared grieved and meek, and a little uncomprehending, entirely unbelieving.

"Mary—Mary, I can't understand! I can't see what the deuce is the matter. Didn't you like the violets I brought you?" And he gave an injured glance at the discarded offering.

Mistress Mary, quite contrary, shrugged disdainfully.

"Not so bad," she answered, "but it would have been much more interesting if you'd given them to some other girl. Please run home and don't bother me any longer!"

Mary laughed gayly as Ted's dejected back passed from view at the bend of the road.

"What an utter bore!" she sighed. "I wonder if I'd look more piquant and bohemian with my hair bobbed? And Ted hates bobbed hair—— Oh, could anything get him really mad, and keep him mad? Inspiration!"

. . . .

"Oh, mamma! Where's my comb? And oh, yes, the scissors, too? And, mamma, you wouldn't mind getting me the hand mirror, would you? Thank you!"

Mrs. Doran, a worried-looking little woman, fidgeted nervously about her over-temperamental daughter until the latter unmistakably excused her.

"I hope you're not going to do anything rash, Mary," murmured the nervous little mother rather apologetically.

"Oh, for heaven's sake, do go away, or I certainly will!" ejaculated Mary crossly. "Can't I have a minute's peace?"

Mary yawned. Really, she was so tired!

She pondered deeply a moment. Then, her decision made, she raised the scissors gingerly and trusted to luck—the flapper's god!

Several hours later a rather different Mary tripped down the stairs—a girl with short, stiff, uneven hair, resembling nothing so much as a futurist puzzle. Mary's eyes were suspiciously red. She held her head defiantly as she swept by her horrified father and her nearly hysterical mother, to the front porch.

The stars glittered dreamily; the town was quiet. What's more, Mary felt lonely.

She smiled in self-satisfaction. Of course she would take the poor boy back—after he had sufficiently suffered and repented his stupidity. In her mind she had the reunion almost staged, when——

"You darling!" Ted's voice sounded. It was dreamy, soft. The porch swing next door, at Cynthia's house, ceased squeaking, a gurgle of delight. Then, silence—silence——

Mary gasped and groped feebly for the door. That funny feeling in her heart was almost intolerable. All her sensations seemed to grow vaguer—stranger. She fell.

Mrs. Doran, hurrying into Mary's room, discovered her daughter in a tumbled heap on the floor in front of the easy-chair from which she had just slid.

"Didn't hurt yourself, dear, did you?" inquired Mrs. Doran. "I'd have called you before, only you were sleeping so peacefully. How on earth did you happen to fall out of that chair? Bad dreams?"

Mary picked herself up and anxiously felt of her hair. As her fingers encountered the loose coils she sighed with relief.

"Did Ted call up while I was asleep?" she asked. "Yes? And he's coming over this evening? Oh, joy and thrills! Is my organdie ironed?"

"Why, bless my soul!" exclaimed Mrs. Doran. "What can have got into the girl?" [illegible]

But Mary didn't answer. As she [illegible]

POULTRY

CONSTRUCTION OF HENHOUSE

Location Is Important to Secure Convenience, Good Drainage and Right Exposure.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

If your poultry is to be healthy, comfortable, contented, it will be necessary to provide a house having plenty of fresh air (but no draft), dryness, sunlight, and space enough to move around without trouble. No particular style of house is adapted to any section of the country. One that gives satisfaction in Maine is likely to do all right in Texas or California, but, quite naturally, more openly built, and consequently less expensive houses will serve in the South.

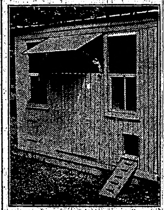
Good drainage, so that the floor and yard will be dry, is indispensable, which means that the site should be chosen carefully. Don't set the house in a pocket or a hollow where cold air settles. Try to remember, too, before you decide the question of location that the site will have much to do with convenience in management. A house that isn't easy to reach is likely to receive less care and attention than if it had been built with this idea in mind.

You can keep more birds on a small floor area under the colony plan than with the intensive system, where the colony plan is used in a mild climate, and the hens have free range most of the year. Colony houses on runners, holding 80 to 75 hens, are about as large as can be moved easily, but larger numbers can be kept in one flock in a long house. Flocks of 60 to 150 are well adapted to the average conditions for producing eggs. Large numbers require less labor, fewer fences, and a lower house cost than small flocks, but there is greater chance for disease, and the individual hen receives less attention.

The cost of housing poultry depends upon many conditions, such as price of lumber, style of house, amount of floor space allowed to each bird, and so on.

Roosts usually are placed next to the end or back walls, 6 to 10 inches above the dropping boards, which should be 2 to 2½ feet above the floor. All the roosts should be on the same level; otherwise the birds will crowd and fight to get on the highest roost. Scantling 2 by 8 inches or 2 by 4 inches, with the upper edges rounded off, will do for roosts with either the wide or narrow surface up. Allow 7 to 10 inches roost space to the fowl, according to the size of the birds. Roosts should be placed 15 inches apart, but the outside ones may be within 10 inches of the edge of the dropping boards.

Nests may be placed under the dropping boards, on partition walls, or in any convenient place where they do not take up floor space, and should be arranged so that the birds can get into them easily. They should be 12 to 14 inches square and 12 to 16 inches high, with a strip about 4 inches high on the open side to retain the nesting material. Provide one nest for every four or five hens. Trap nests are essential for any careful breeding work, and you can learn all about these in Farmers' Bulletin 682, A Simple Trap Nest for Poultry, which you can get upon application to the division of publication of the United States Department of Agriculture.



Small Colony House on Government Farm at Beltsville, Md.

Houses of solid concrete are cold and damp, but concrete blocks may be used with good results. Hollow tile makes a very good poultry house, and it can be bought in some sections at a price which compares favorably, durability considered, with wood. This construction is well adapted to incubator cellars and brooder houses, or to any buildings requiring double walls and good insulation. All kinds of wood are used, but anything used for outside construction should be well seasoned, otherwise the shrinkage will cause cracks in the walls.

DAIRY SCHOOL A GREAT SUCCESS

Fairly Good Attendance At Both The Morning And Afternoon Sessions

The dairy school here last Friday conducted by the farm bureau association, was a decided success. The morning session was taken up by discussions as to the relative value of pure bred sires for dairy herds, and other matters of vital interest to those engaged in that industry. The afternoon session was favored by a larger attendance. L. V. Wilson dairy specialist connected with the University Farm, spoke on value dairy products free from tuberculosis, and told how the disease could be detected, controlled, and eradicated. He also gave an interesting talk on balanced rations and how to prepare and feed them. In addition to the features enumerated above, some very interesting films dealing with different phases of the dairy industry, were shown.

The school was very instructive and was thoroly appreciated by all who attended.

Operetta Was Fine

The operetta, "The Miser's Dream" presented by grade school children at the Imperial last evening was very well attended. The play was a seasonable one especially fitted for presentation at this time. The play was well staged and all members of the cast took their parts exceptionally well. A neat sum was realized which will be used for fittings and equipment of the rest room in the school building.

To Open School

The auto school to be conducted by the Northwestern Auto Company at Thief River, opening of which was announced Nov. 15, has been delayed by unforseen circmustances until New Year. Messers Sundahl and Son intend to get the school in operation immediately after the hoildays if sufficent students enroll to make the venture a paying proposition.

Miss Elizabeth Johnson, who attends Teacher's Training College at Bemidji, came home last evening to spend Christmas with her mother.

Miss Ann Patterson, who is connected with the Home School for Girls at Sauk Center, and Miss Inez, who is with the children's bureau at St. Paul, are expected home Saturday.

May Organize Band

A movement is on foot among the young men of this village to organize a band after the holidays. There is room here for such an organization, and there is plenty of local talent and good material for making a first class band. Nothing enlivens a place so much as a good band, and for that reason the move should have the hearty support of everybody in the village. Announcement of the organization meeting will appear later.

Married At Crookston

A marriage of interest to St. Hilaire people occured last Saturday at Crookston when Mrs. Jens Nelson, nee Mildred Stranahan, became the bride of Mr. LeRoy Lytle of that city. The bride is very well known to many local people, she having made this place her home for a number of years prior to removal from here to Bagley. The groom is a traveling salesman for Marshall-Wells Co. of Duluth, with headquarters at Crookston, where Mr. and Mrs. Lytle will make their home.

New Mail Route

A new tri-weekly mail route is to be established out from Red Lake Falls into the townships of River and Gervais in the near future. Residents of those townships have never had any mail service so the establishment of this route will be a great convenience to them.

Cash Cartier was up yesterday from Red Lake to read electric meters.

Miss Laura Simonson arrived Tuesday from Minneapolis to spend Christmas at home.

Mrs. Alma Anette of Bemidji spent Tuesday and Wednesday here attending to business matters.

Mr. Prouly of Superior, Wis., was here between trains Tuesday visiting R.E. Stebphenson.

School will close Friday afternooen for the annual Christmas vacation and will remain closed until Tuesday morning, Jan. 10.

Buy your phonograph records for holiday use or as gifts now, and get a chance on the phonograph. See my adv. H. A. Olsen

After spending a week at the Jackson home here, Mrs. K. B. Johnson left Monday for Crookston for a visit at the A. W. Jackson home.

Mr. and Mrs. John Jacobson of Eveleth, Minn. are here for a visit at the G. Lindjquist and Axel Jaobson homes.

Oscar Haugen has sold his portable sawmill outfit, and it will be moved down on the Knott place south along the east side of the river.

Miss Mabel Loberg and Mildred Fellman, who attend the State Teachers' Training College at Moorhead, came home Saturday to spend Christmas vacation with their parents.

MAKING DIRT FLY ON STATE ROADS

Winter Program Of Road Building Is Now Well Under Way.

Minnesota's plan for cutting unemployment in the state this winter by putting on the greatest winter road building program ever attempted is now in working order. Large contracts covering new roads, shaping old ones, graveling and other work have recently been awarded by the Highway Commission. It is estimated that steady work for 7000 men and teams will be furnished during the winter on those contracts already let, and others will be let shortly which will employ a much larger number. Patrolmen will keep open trunk line roads so they may be used for winter auto travel wherever there is enough traffic to warrant the expense.

Board Meets

Regular monthly meeting of the creamery board was held at the creamery Monday. In addition to the usual gist of business the board hired Will Kruse as helper for the coming year.

25 Years Ago

Mike Johnson moved into town for the winter.

Elmer Stranahan was home to spend the holidays.

A number of citizens had a surprise party at the John Halvorson home.

Prof. J. O'Brien went to Red Lake Falls to spend the holidays with relatives.

A. R. Jones made a trip to Thief River and reported the roads to be in very poor condition.

The Val Blatz company had a representative here arranging for building a new beer house south of the depot.

R. H. Aimar left for the Arpin lumber camp up in the woods to take charge of their blacksmithing work for the winter.

Miss Laura Avelson and Mr. Peter Dainard, well known locally, were married at Crookston on Dec. 22nd. The Spectator of 1921 congratulates Mr. and Mrs. Dainard on the occasion of their silver anniversary.

Excellent Play

The play, "An Ealry Bird" put on last Thursday evening by home talent was easily the best of its kind that has shown here for many years. A good deal of credit is due members of the cast, all of whom played their parts to perfection. In spite of inclement weather, which undoubtedly kept many from the country from venturing out, the play was greeted by a full house, even standing room being at a premium.

With talent at home able to perform as creditably in "An Early Bird" there should be no occasion for looking outside the home town for entertainment.

Brands Report Palse

Congressman Halvor Steenerson has issued a statement branding as false a widely circulated report that he had decided to retire from office. Mr. Steenerson says, "In working for legislation in interests of the farmers, especially regarding grading and marketing of grain, I know I have incurred the hostility of certain interests in the grain trade, and their wish to retire me is no doubt father of the thought.

Lose At Thief River

The high school basketeers lost to Thief River high by a score of 22 to 7 in their game played at Thief River last Saturday evening. The local lads were handicapped somewhat by being on strange floor, but put up a mighty good scrap.

Rev. and Mrs. A. F. Nelson were at Thief River between trains, Friday.

Miss Mabel Patterson arrived Saturday from Duluth to spend the holidays at home.

Ann Harder was down from Thief River last week-end for a visit at Kinney's.

Miss Bessie Avelson is here this week from Thief River for a visit at the Wm. Olson home.

Mesdames N. A. Nelson, W. Adams and Rupert Nelson were at Thief River between trains last Friday.

A light fall of the "beautiful" the latter part of last week, has improved sleighing especially on the country roads.

Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Olsen, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Mike Ford, autoed to Grand Forks and returned Friday.

Ed. Aubol returned home Saturday after spending ten days with his brother, Guy, who recently underwent an operation at the Mayo hospital a Rochester.

Mrs. Ina Johnson had the misfortune to break a bone in her left leg when she slipped and fell near the flowing well at the bank corner yesterday afternoon.

Hjalmar Johnson left Saturday with a carload of livestock for St. Paul market. He intended to spend Christmas with his brother, Rev. H. P. Johnson at Minneapolis, before returning.

DOCTOR KIRBY IS IN TROUBLE

Manslaughter Charge Filed Against Him In North Dakota.

Dr. S. Kirby, a Pennington County resident until last fall when he moved to Northwood, N. D., is again in toils of the law, this time facing a charge of first degree manslaughter as well as one of practicing medicine without a North Dakota license. According to reports, Dr. Kirby treated a man for a slight cold, using his usual blistering treatment. Infection set in from the blistered throat causing septicemia, which resulted in the death of the patient.

Preliminary hearing on the manslaughter count will be held Dec. 29, and in meantime Dr. Kirby is out on bail, furnished by residents of Northwood.

Speculation is rife in this locality as to the outcome of this late move on part of Dakota authorities. While it may prove a hard matter to convict Dr. Kirby on either count, it is likely he will decide Dakota climate does not exactly suit him in which case he may decide to again locate on his farm in this county.

Grain Rates Down

Reductions in freight rates on grain, grain products and hay will be reduced approximately 16 per cent on Dec. 27, by order of the interstate commission, who denied petition of the railroads to have the slash in rates postponed for another six months. Corn and other coarse grains will be carried for ten per cent less than wheat and other bread stuff grains, according to the same order.

Christmas Program

The M. E. Sunday School will give a Christmas program at the local church Christmas eve. Everybody welcome.

Clara Fellman and Huldah Odegaard, who attend business college at Crookston, arrived home the first of the week to spend the holidays

Miss Esther Hovet, who attends Teachers' Training College at Moorhead, came home Saturday to spend the holiday.s

MELODY ANN

By FRANCES E. GOODRICH.

©, 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

Melody Ann sat on the back step, looking across the mist-filled valley. As usual she was singing, otherwise she would not have been Melody Ann.

"When Melody Ann takes them high notes it makes shivers go right up your backbone," said Deacon Brown, and the other villagers agreed with him.

"Too bad Melody Ann is so odd," they said. "If she'd only dress herself up a bit and not look so gawky she might get a fellow as well as the other girls; but, land's sake, all she thinks of is getting off by herself somewhere and singing."

She was odd. When the other young people were enjoying themselves with lively country amusements, Melody Ann was roaming through the woods or by the sea, singing in her high, untrained voice.

* * * * * * *

The mist slowly dissolved itself in pink, glistening dawn, and Melody Ann caught her breath for a moment with the beauty and mystery of it. Then, like a bird carolling the new day, her voice rose sweet and piercing in a hymn of praise.

She did not hear the automobile that stopped by the gate, nor see the heavily-built, black-bearded man who left the car and walked toward the back of the house, so she was much startled when a gruff voice said "Great! Do that over again, girl." Jumping up, she looked into black eyes that shone with eagerness. She stood looking at the stranger in astonishment, when his impatient command again broke his silence. "But—but—I don't know what I was singing," stammered Melody Ann. "I just sing that way most all the time."

"Well, you can sing the scale, can't you?" he asked.

"Oh, yes, sir. We are taught to sing that way in school," and, always glad to oblige when she could, she sang the scale. Then an octave higher, then still higher, but the man raised his hand. "That will do. Where are your parents? I want to see them."

"My father and mother are dead and I live with grandmother. Won't you come in?" and she led the way into the little kitchen, where the table was laid for breakfast. Mrs. Carwin appeared and with simple hospitality made a place for the stranger at the table.

With shy amazement Melody Ann heard him tell her grandmother that her voice was a remarkable one. It was his business to find and train just such voices as Melody Ann's.

Mrs. Carwin listened eagerly; then with tears in her eyes slowly shook her head. "I know her voice is different from most, but we haven't any money for to have it trained now. Perhaps as soon as she gets to work herself she can earn a little and take lessons."

But the man shook his head impatiently. "Poof, we cannot wait until she can earn the money. The time to start this training is now, and the money will be provided. In New York there is a man of great wealth who gives liberally to train such girls as your granddaughter."

* * * * * * *

That evening the little house overlooking the valley was closed and Mrs. Carwin and Melody Ann went away in the big car to a new life.

Then began work such as Melody Ann had never dreamed of. There were many nights when she crept into bed, wishing with all her heart she was back in the little house on the hill, singing just as she liked.

For some time a thought had troubled Melody Ann. It seemed so ungrateful not to see her benefactor and thank him, even if he would have to wait a long time until she could repay him. She broached the subject to the teacher, but he discouraged it. "Wait until your first public appearance, and then you shall meet him," he said.

At last the day, the hour, the moment, and Melody Ann, in a simple frock of white, stood alone before that swaying sea of faces. A strange faintness held her for an instant, then the orchestra began the familiar air, the faces faded and before her lay the mist-filled valley, and she was welcoming the dawn.

The music stopped and her eyes saw the lights again and the faces, and she felt the tense silence. Then applause rolled like thunder through the great hall. She saw her teacher, rather white faced, but smiling, and grandmother, nodding happily with tears rolling down her cheeks.

At last the crowd was gone and Melody Ann stood face to face with the man who had made her success possible.

* * * * * * *

A year later Melody Ann sat on the back step waiting for the first pink flush to waken the gray mist to life, but she was not alone. A strong hand held her own tenderly, and Melody Ann looked into her husband's eyes with a great love shining in her own.

"We will help many other girls just as you helped me, won't we?" she murmured, and got her answer with his lips against her own.

The pink swiftly spread over the gray and Melody Ann's voice rang joyously down the valley.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE.

Whereas, default has been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage executed and delivered by George L. Schmitz and Mame Schmitz his wife, mortgagors, to Martin Bozdeck as mortgagee, upon and covering the following described real estate situate in the County of Pennington, State of Minnesota, to-wit:

The northeast quarter (NE¼) of Section eleven (11) in township one hundred and fifty three (153) north of Range forty (40) west of the fifth principal meridan in Minnesota, containing one hundred and sixty acres more or less according to the Government survey thereof, and which said mortgage bears date the 1st day of November A. D. 1916, and was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for said county of Pennington, State of Minnesota on the 30th day of June A. D. 1917, at 5 o'clock P. M. in book 57 of mortgages on page 133, and

Whereas said default consists in the failure of the said mortgagors to pay the sum of one hundred and ninety two dollars, interest due upon the principal sum of thirty two hundred dollars, and whereas, by virtue of the terms and conditions of the said mortgage the said mortgagee has elected to declare the whole sum secured by said mortgage due and payable, and

Whereas, there is actually due and claimed to be due at the date of this mortgage the sum of three thousand and four hundred dollars, and no action having been instituted to recover the same or any part thereof,

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that under and pursuant to the power of sale therein contained and the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed and the real property therein described will be sold at public auction to the highest bidder for cash, by the sheriff of Pennington County, Minnesota, at the front door of the Court House in the City of Thief River Falls, in said Pennington County on Tuesday the 10th day of January A. D. 1922, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of said day to pay the amount which shall then be due upon said mortgage and the costs of foreclosure thereof including the sum of seventy five dollars attorney's fees as stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure thereof, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale as provided by law.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of One Hundred Eighty-two and 40-100 ($182.40) Dollars, interest, which is claimed to be due and is due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage duly executed and delivered by Edward Johnson and M. E. Johnson, his wife, Mortgagors, to Milo G. Drake and Elsie F. Drake Mortgagees, bearing date the 19th day of July, 1918, and with a Power of sale therein contained duly recorded in the Office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Pennington and State of Minnesota, on the 12th day of December, 1918, at 8 o'clock A. M., in book 58 of Mortgages on page 543.

And whereas, the said Mortgagors having failed to pay the taxes on said land and having failed to pay insurance premiums upon insurance policies covering the improvements upon said real estate and having failed to pay the interest on prior mortgages according to the terms of said mortgage, and the mortgagees having been obliged to pay and having paid the sum of Five Hundred Five and 78-100 ($505.78) Dollars, as interest on prior mortgages, premium on insurance policies and costs of foreclosure of prior mortgages.

And whereas, the said Mortgagees have duly elected and do hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice under the terms and conditions of said mortgage and the power of sale therein contained; and whereas, there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice, the sum of Four Thousand Two Hundred Eighty-eight and 18-100 ($4 288.18) Dollars, and whereas, the power of sale has become operative, and no action or proceedings having been instituted at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof;

NOW THEREFORE, NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That by virtue of the Power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the Statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, to wit: The Southeast Quarter of Southeast Quarter (SE¼SE¼) of Section Thirty-three (33) and the South Half of the Southwest Quarter (S½SW¼) and the Northeast Quarter of the Southwest Quarter (NE¼SW¼) of Section Thirty-four (34) all in Township One Hundred Fifty-three (153) North of Range Forty-four (44) West; also the South Half of the Northwest Quarter (S½NW¼) and the South Half of the Northeast Quarter (S½NE¼) and Lots One (1), Two (2), Three (3), and Four (4) of Section Five (5) all in Township One Hundred Fifty-two (152) North of Range Forty-four (44) West of the Fifth Principal Meridian, Pennington County, Minnesota, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Pennington County, Minnesota, at the front door of the Court House in the City of Thief River Falls, Pennington County Minnesota, on the 14th day of January, 1922, at 10 o'clock A. M. of that day, at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash to pay the said debt of Four Thousand Two Hundred Eighty-Eight and 18-100 ($4288.18) Dollars, and interest and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and Seventy-five ($75.00) Dollars Attorney's fees, as stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure and the disbursements allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale as provided by law.

It's Time You Were in Bed

Voices of the Bells

"THERE is neither speech nor language, but their voices are heard among men." This is an inscription engraved upon one of the bells in a tower in Antwerp, Belgium, in 1658, but, long before this date, voices of bells had told to humanity their tales of gladness or sadness, of threatened danger or safety achieved, and always the world understood and responded to mood of emergency as the case might have been.

For centuries church bells have told the ever-new, old story of the Christ Child. For weeks before the sacred day arrives a wild rush of preparations leaves little time for reflection. In these busy hours clanging bells of impatient street cars spur the pedestrian to heroic efforts and startle the preoccupied shopper out of some absorbing reverie. This is the time when fatigue and happiness go hand in hand, and many an exhausted mother, nodding on her homeward ride, hears the ripple of baby laughter and the patter of hurrying feet above the raucous noises attending her trip. Father, with his arms piled high, looks over the crowd with a far-away expression, seeing only the one paramount incident of the Christmas revelation, and starry eyes that will turn toward him with a deeper lovelight written in their shining depths. It is this marvelous hour toward which the whole world moves with one concerted motive, and in its hallowed joy revives the spirit that is the foundation of a nation's greatness.

When the bells of Christmas morn peal their tidings of "Peace and Good Will" it will be to a world waiting to receive the message; a world that has been hurried and excited and interested, but which has all unconsciously been acquiring a spirit en rapport with the burden of their chiming. All the stress of living and striving, all the hurts and the sorrows are softened by the benediction of the bells. Deeper reverence for life and a fuller appreciation of the love that surrounds us is roused by their Yuletide music. They call to all that is best and loveliest and we answer by an outpouring of Christmas spirit, a keener sense of human brotherhood and a closer knitting of family ties. While they have "neither speech nor language," they tell a marvelous story, a story that we understand, and we live better for that understanding.—Detroit News.

Lemon Snaps.

Cream together one large cupful of sugar and two-thirds of a cupful of butter. Dissolve half a teaspoonful of soda in two teaspoonfuls of hot water and add to the creamed mixture. Flavor with the grated rind of a lemon. Add enough sifted flour to roll out very thin; cut and bake in a hot oven.

The Christmas Spirit

AFTER a year of strife and confusion the world is about to declare an armistice for the observance of Christmas. It is curious how the essence of Christianity gets itself recognized and practiced in spite of the world, the flesh and the devil.

In this time of good will everybody becomes Christian, for Christmas is simply the substitution of the spirit of giving for the spirit of getting.

When Jesus was born in Bethlehem there came to the world a new conception of God and of his relations with man. The Child lying in the Bethlehem manger will forever symbolize and express the world-moving truth that God is love and, therefore, He gives Himself to and for men made in His image.

Tradition records that when the Wise Men from the East journeyed to Bethlehem to worship the new-born Child, they brought gifts.

The gift of God is life eternal, here and hereafter. When this divine spark animates the bosoms of men, they, too, begin to give.

Giving is the chief business of life for God and men alike. What a man gives he has. He loses all else. Earthly immortality lies in whatever one gives to one's fellows in service and friendship and healing.

I wonder if we shall ever be able to practice the Christmas spirit the year round!

If that time ever comes we shall find that most of our personal and social problems, perplexities, animosities and failures are unnecessary. If we want spring and summer and golden harvest, we must have the sun.—Dr. Charles Aubrey Eaton in Leslie's.

SAINT OF VIRTUE AND PIETY

St. Nicholas Was of Unblemished Character, According to Hone's "Ancient Mysteries."

ACCORDING to Hone's "Ancient Mysteries" Saint Nicholas, bishop of Myra, was a saint of great virtue and piety. The old legend is that the sons of a rich Asiatic, on their way to Athens for education, were slain by a robber innkeeper, dismembered and their parts hidden in a brine tub. In the morning came the saint, whose visions had warned him of the crime, whose authority forced confession, and whose prayers restored the boys to life.

St. Nicholas is the grand patron of the children of France, to whom he brings bonbons for the good, but a cane for the naughty child. In Germany he acts as an advance courier, examining into the conduct of the children, distributing goodies and promises to those with good records, a further reward which the Christ Child brings at Christmas time. But his own peculiar celebration takes place in a tiny seaport in southern Italy.

On St. Nicholas day, December 6, the sailors of the port take the saint's image from the beautiful Church of St. Nicholas, and with a long procession of boats carry it far out to sea. Returning with it at nightfall they are met by bonfires, torches, all the townspeople and hundreds of quaintly dressed pilgrims, who welcome the returning saint with songs and carry him to visit one shrine after another, before returning him to the custody of the canons.

Chambers' "Book of Days" says: "Through the native rock which forms the tomb of the saint, water constantly exudes, which is collected by the canons on a sponge attached to a reed, squeezed into bottles and sold to pilgrims as a miraculous specific under the name of the 'manna of St. Nicholas.'"

The Empty, Raggedy Stockings

What of the empty, raggedy stockings
That will hang by the chimney on Christmas eve,
With their mute appeals from the poor little owners
To the dear old Santa in whom they believe?

For their share of his presents they ask such a little,
"Just a dolly to hold in my arms while I sleep,
A little tin auto that runs when you wind it,
A pounding red drum or a woolly white sheep."

The only light in their dim, dark existence
Is that wonderful day when old Santa will come
With his treasure filled pack that he brings on his back
From his fairyland, snowyland, toyland home.

What beautiful dreams will come to them sleeping
Under the coverlet shabby and worn;
But what of the empty, raggedy stockings
That will hang by the chimney on Christmas morn?

Our Christmas Day

THERE is an innate perception among men and women that Christmas day ought to be the happiest in the year. It is doubtful if they ever attempt to analyze their own half-formed ideas on the subject, but it is only necessary to turn to the writings of those who have been most solicitous for the well-being of their fellow men to see that this is the case. Look, for instance, at Washington Irving telling in "Bracebridge Hall," the story of a good old-fashioned Christmas according to the flesh, a picture that was to express his ideal of "on earth peace, good will toward men." Or turn to the greatest of all the chroniclers of Christmas, Charles Dickens, the man who in his many pictures, from that of Dingley Dell to that of Scrooge's bedroom, sought to make Christmas a season of good deeds and of good cheer. "Blessings on your kind heart!" Jeffrey wrote to him, on the publication of the "Christmas Carol." "You should be happy yourself, for you may be sure you have done more good by this little publication, fostered more kindly feelings and prompted more positive acts to beneficence than can be traced to all the pulpits and confessionals in Christendom since Christmas, 1842." After that, read the accounts of how they actually kept Christmas at Bracebridge Hall and Dingley Dell; contrast it with the marvelous story, told by Luke, "the beloved physician," of that first Christmas day in Nazareth.—Christian Science Monitor.

FESTIVAL TIME IN HONOLULU

"Melting Pot of Pacific" Consoles Herself for Lack of Snow and Other Yuletide Fixings.

HONOLULU on Christmas eve consoles herself for the lack of snow and other traditional Yuletide fixings with what a paper calls "a conglomerate festivity impossible of counterpart anywhere else in the world." With an abandonment of hilarity equaled only by the pure incongruity of the thing, Americans, Japanese, Englishmen, Filipinos, Portuguese, Koreans, soldiers, sailors and civilian men, women and children, took part in the pageant of the streets, throwing confetti and lighting firecrackers.

"After all, it is the incongruity that makes the celebration of Christmas in Honolulu unique. Here in the melting pot of the Pacific, where those who melt are matched by those who resist the alchemy, all nations of the earth meet in common observance."

Followers of Buddha and Confucius take part in the Christian festival with zest, just as Christians there help to celebrate the religious holidays of others. But this is a strange Christmas picture: "Horns were everywhere, firecrackers snapped and scattered and above the din at times could be heard the plaintive tone of Hawaii's ukelele and the steel guitar."

Santa's Prize Dolly

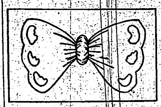
Decorating the Christmas Tree

"COME on out and help build a fort, Johnny."

"Can't—I'm busy," replied the boy standing in the door. "Come in and see what we're doin'."

Billie came and found Johnny and his two sisters gathered around the library table, on which reposed many piles of tissue paper, bits of ribbon, walnut shells, paste, paints and shears. Ethel was sitting on the floor beside a large pan of popcorn, Helen was cutting gold stars over the waste basket, while Johnny yielded a brush full of gold paint. Taken all together, it was a scene full of delightful possibilities, Billie decided.

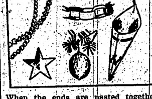
"You see," Helen explained hospitably, "we always decorate our own Christmas tree and we're making lots of new things this year. It's more fun to string popcorn and cranberries and gild walnuts and make butterflies than it is to buy 'em downtown. Ethel, you give Billie another needle and he can string cranberries. They're easiest to begin on."



Have you children discovered yet that it is more fun to "make things" with your own hands than it is to buy them with money? If not, you have missed a lesson which every child should learn.

The tree decorations which Johnny and his sisters were making may be made by any child. First on the list comes popcorn and cranberries. These may be strung separately or alternately. If yellow field corn is soaked until softened, it may also be strung. A small tree was once trimmed with a lattice work of strung popcorn, covering all the top of the tree, with tiny red tissue bells at the end of each string.

Nearly every child has learned to make different kinds of paper chains. Packages of colored paper may be obtained at almost any printing office. These may be cut into short lengths. When the ends are pasted together with one strip looped into the next, the "loop" chain is the result. This may be varied in many ways by combining different colors and joining other chains onto the original at various angles.



The gold paint which Johnny was using was changing walnut shells into tiny glittering ornaments. A tiny hole bored in each and they were ready to be hung from the branches on bits of gilded wire. Small balls may be made from tinfoil or the tinfoil used to cover other ornaments.

A sheet of gold and one of silver paper present many possibilities. Stars may be cut from cardboard and covered with the paper. Match boxes may be covered with it and used to hold candy and nuts. Cornucopias, produced by rolling one corner of an oblong piece of paper toward the opposite corner and pasting the edges together, may be cut from gilt paper or decorated with strips of it. These are very useful for holding popcorn, but are not strong enough for candy.

Tiny butterflies may rest on the topmost branches of the Christmas tree. Cut oblongs of colored tissue paper in various sizes, rounding the corners enough so they will give the appearance of wings. If the paper is thin, several pieces may be put together, crushed at the center, and black silk floss tied in two places so as to form the body of the butterfly.

As a finish for the top of the tree, a small doll may be garbed to represent Santa Claus. A few pieces from an old red flannel petticoat will produce the coat, trousers and cap; cotton batting the fur trimming; and an old kid glove will make the boots.

The lighting problem connected with a Christmas tree is always a serious one. Electric lights are always best wherever possible. If candles are used, they should be placed securely on the tree and as far away from any decorations as possible. The tree should stand securely fastened in a box on a piece of canvas or old matting. The candles should not be lighted except when the older members of the family are present to watch them.—Successful Farming.

A CHRISTMAS STORY

EVERY year when Christmas comes round ma goes up in our attic, digs around among boxes, broken furniture and old clothes that have accumulated there and produces the dusty red and green Christmas wreaths of last year; jolly good Christmas odors issue from the kitchen; Sallie and Mae come in from the crisp winter evening air, muffling tissue paper packages under their arms and speaking in mysterious whispers; little Jack and Peg and I are taken over town, excited and happy, to see old Santa enthroned in a case of cotton batting snow on the second floor of the big store.

Then comes Christmas morning with its surprises and its beautifully trimmed tree. The height of the day's happiness is reached when Uncle Ben and Aunt Molly arrive with their children, rosy cheeked and rosy nosed, too, from the effects of King Winter's nip.

After all pa's and ma's folks are there, the house is just one lump of good cheer. The day slips by and evening comes. The part that is always the most pleasing to me is when we gather about the fire and Sallie, seated at the piano, plays the Christmas hymns and all the children sing them, grandfather joining in the chorus in his cracked old voice.

Thus it was. But last year it was different for me. Ma got the wreaths as usual; the same good odors came from the kitchen; the crinkling of Sallie and Mae's packages could be heard, same as ever; we were taken over town to see—but here's where the sad part comes in. How heavy my heart was as I trudged on our way to see old Nick with Peg next to me, her little hand holding tight on mine. And when I thought of her joy when she should see Santa, I felt so old, so experienced.

All Christmas day I went around in a dream from the first thing in the morning until I was tucked in bed that night. All day there was envy in my heart toward all the children from little lisping Jack to seven-year-old Peg, because my day had lost its joy for me, on account of the fact—oh, killer of joy—I no longer believed in Santa Claus.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

CLASS AND CASTE FORGOTTEN

Christmas Season Is One Period of the Year When All People Are Equal.

THIS is the season of equality, the one brief period of the year when the Christianized world momentarily forgets class and caste. Rich and poor, great and lowly, good and bad, today stand more nearly on a footing of equality than they have stood since the last Yuletide, or than they will stand for another year.

For this is the Christmas season and Christmas belongs to the child, and untutored childhood knows no caste. It is only from grown-ups that the little ones learn false standards of social place.

In every human heart that is not calloused to all joy or sorrow, or dead to the finest emotions of manhood and womanhood, there is enshrined some child, either dead or living—for child love is the universal emotion of the soul.

For this brief season, then, let childhood take our gnarled hand of sophistry and beguile us by the finger back to a fleeting glimpse of that lotus land of equality we once knew and can know only once.

An Old Time Christmas Carol

THE following interesting carol is preserved in Poor Robin's Almanac for 1695. It is of interest as throwing light on the material side of the old-time Christmas celebrations. "Minced" pies are referred to, it will be noticed—a term never heard nowadays. And instead of plum pudding there is "plum porridge." The carol reveals, too, that the material for Christmas decorations was fuller in the old days, including holly, ivy, bay, rosemary and "lawrel."

Now, thrice-welcome Christmas, which brings us good cheer,
Minced pies and plum porridge, good ale and strong beer;
With pig, goose and capon, the best that may be,
So well doth the weather and our stomachs agree.
Observe how the chimneys do smoak all about,
The cooks are providing for dinner, no doubt.
But those on whose tables no victuals appear,
O, may they keep Lent all the rest of the year!
With holly and ivy, so green and so gay,
We deck up our houses as fresh as the day;
With bays and rosemary, and lawrel compleat,
And everyone now is king of conceit.
But as for curmudgeons, who will not be free,
I wish they may die on the three-legged tree.

It is of interest to learn that the well known and oft used couplet, "Christmas comes but once a year, and when it comes it brings good cheer," originally appeared in a mock Christmas play of the Fifteenth century. Here are the lines:

Bounce buckram, velvets dear,
Christmas comes but once a year,
And when it comes it brings good cheer.

ABOUT THE HOLIDAY GREENS

Spirit of Poetry in Laurel; Bay Associated With Victory; Holly Emblem of Good Luck.

WHEN we weave garlands of Christmas greenery, each branch of foliage typifies some ancient virtue, suggests a hoary superstition and carries a meaning far beyond that with which a decorator regards it.

According to the ancients the laurel communicates the spirit of poetry. To gain poetic inspiration a man should sleep with a sprig of laurel under his pillow.

Bay has several meanings. It has always been associated with victory, while it is supposed to protect the wearer from lightning. The withering and shriveling of its leaves was said to foretell death, which may account for the superstition that evergreens should not remain in the house after Twelfth night.

The Romans used to send one another sprigs of holly as emblems of good luck. Immortality is denoted by the yew. For this reason it is always used to decorate churches at Christmas time.—Tit-Bits.

Fruit Sticks.

Chop fine or put through a food chopper equal quantities of figs, dates and nut meats. With a little tart jelly, like currant or grape, work this into a thick paste. Stir into the well-beaten whites of two or more eggs and spread on long salted wafers. If the jelly does not seem to stiffen the whites, use a little pulverized sugar also.

The Christmas Leaven

by Louise E. Drew

A GREEN Christmas, a fat graveyard!" sighed Mrs. Drake wistfully, gazing across the shriveled fields to the little cemetery on the hillside, where two sons and a daughter were resting under the brooding pines. "I never did like a green Christmas," she added, puckering her forehead.

"Pshaw! Christmas is no better than any other day, Lucy," returned the colonel testily, watching the effect of his words through the overhanging curtain of his bushy eyebrows.

"But it doesn't seem at all like Christmas, Henry, if you dont make presents," faltered his wife. "I can't make it seem right that Nora and the children are not to be with us. Don't you think we should let bygones be bygones and telephone them to come over?" she added timidly.

"Silence!" thundered her husband, his face as white as his hair from the pent-up wrath of his feelings. "Nora made her bed, now let her lie in it. She's no daughter of mine to marry a good-for-nothing scamp of an artist without a penny to his name. As to the children, they're as dead to me as those up on the hillside yonder!"

From her corner by the fireplace Vesta eyed her father nervously, as she stroked the fur of Nebuchadnezzar, Nora's pet cat. How changed he was, and what had brought it all about? There was no real reason that she could see, except her father's stubbornness. Don was not a bad sort, and he had made Nora a good husband, providing well for her and the children. Then there was John Denton. It was just such a night as this that he had driven him from the house.

The young man had made some laughing remark about their differences in politics to which the colonel had taken exception. Hot of temper and bitter of tongue, he had disposed of the matter promptly. John had asked Vesta to decide whether she would be ruled by love or fear. She was but twenty, and to her filial duty was a fetish. There was no alternative, she told him. She had never answered one of his letters, and in time they had ceased to come. He had forgotten, of course, and it was as well for both, as her duty lay to her parents, now entirely alone. Vesta's fingers trembled as she embroidered the last dainty forget-me-not on the little pink flannel for Nora's newest baby, the one they had never seen.

The fire was getting low, and she rose and poked the coals until they glowed with new life, then heaped the andirons with hickory logs. In a few moments the faint odor of pungent wood began to filter through the room, and as it did so Vesta's courage rose.

"We must hang up our stockings tonight, dears," she began softly. "Let's just play we are little children again. I'm sure Santa Claus is coming this way. Let us be joyful together this year, at least, for life is so uncertain, you know. Won't you play I'm your little girl this Christmas, Daddy?" she ended pleadingly.

"Don't be a fool, Vesta," retorted her father sharply. "If you're ever going to be a woman you should show some signs of it at thirty. All this talk about Christmas is nonsense. . . . nonsense, I tell you. I declare I'm sick of people spending their last cent to make a show this time of the year, and making a bid for presents in exchange for their own."

"But the joy of giving—"

"Saw old Joe Bean today," he went on, waving her remarks aside. "And what do you suppose he had the nerve to say? Just this, 'I'm bringing you a nice fat turkey tonight, colonel,' as much as to say, 'Won't you have my present ready for me to take back when I call?' The smart old codger!"

"What did you say, father? I hope you didn't hurt his feelings. Joe is well meaning, and loves to do for others," excused Mrs. Drake.

"You know the name of the place that is paved with good intentions of just such fools!" snapped the colonel, knocking the ashes from his pipe and filling it with fresh tobacco. "Zounds! How I hate the word Christmas!"

"The Christ Child's birthday, daddy!" reproached Vesta boldly, heaping [illegible] spirit never [illegible] welcome!"

"Stop that drivel about Christmas!" commanded the colonel sharply, banging his cane on the hearth, "or I'll . . . leave the house this instant. . . . Do you hear me?" He ended with an impotent thump of his faithful stick.

Vesta rose slowly, and bravely tossing back her head, crossed the room and flung open the door.

"Glad to see you, Miss Vesta, and a merry Christmas," greeted old Joe Bean cheerily. "Told your father today I'd bring you over a turkey for the great feast. Knew yours had all died off this year, and thought it would help to tell you it's Christmas," he chuckled with smiling lips that his enormous beard could not conceal.

"Merry Christmas to you, Joe!" returned Vesta. "Come right in," she added with a covert glance in the direction of her father, who was sitting very erect in his Sleepy Hollow chair. Mrs. Drake rose and came forward, hands outstretched nervously.

"It was very kind of you to remember us, Joe," she began, taking the turkey. "Why, what a nice fat fellow he is!" she added appreciatively.

"Corn-fed!" chuckled the old man. "Fattened him on purpose for you," he answered ingratiatingly.

The colonel nodded indifferently.

"Oh, don't say thank you. It's nothing at all," deprecated Joe.

"I wasn't going to, Bean, so save your breath. I'm not keen about either giving or taking. Every man for himself, you know. That's my motto. It's a—"

But the insistent sound of the knocking again drowned the colonel's words.

Vesta was poking the fire to hide her embarrassment. Her mother went to the door.

"Howdy, Aunt Lucy!" greeted a fresh, boyish voice.

"Well, of all things, if it isn't Phil Drake!" cried she in a muffled voice between the bear hug he proffered. "This is a surprise, my boy. We thought you were still in France."

"Just got back, and no place ever looked quite so good to me. My train was delayed down the line, owing to a wreck . . . . no, no one hurt, but everybody's held up for Christmas. I just thought I'd spend mine with my Cranford relation, so I took Shank's mare over here. Howdy, uncle, and a merry Christmas! Vesta, you're a brick to keep the home fires burning for a fellow," he addded, giving her a kiss on either cheek.

"I see you got some decorations," said Vesta proudly, eyeing his croix de guerre, "and a full-fledged lieutenant at that."

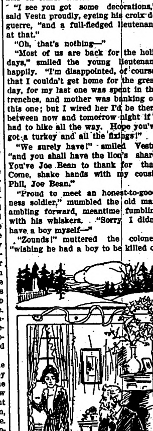
"Oh, that's nothing—"

"Most of us are back for the holidays," smiled the young lieutenant happily. "I'm disappointed, of course, that I couldn't get home for the great day, for my last one was spent in the trenches, and mother was banking on this one; but I wired her I'd be there between now and tomorrow night if I had to hike all the way. Hope you've got a turkey and all the fixings!"

"We surely have!" smiled Vesta, "and you shall have the lion's share. You've Joe Bean to thank for that. Come, shake hands with my cousin Phil, Joe Bean."

"Proud to meet an honest-to-goodness soldier," mumbled the old man, ambling forward, meantime fumbling with his whiskers. "Sorry I didn't have a boy myself—"

"Zounds!" muttered the colonel; "wishing he had a boy to be killed off by the Germans. Some patriot you are, Joe. Glad my two died before the Huns got a whack at 'em."



"Silence!"

"Henry!" pleaded his wife, tears welling to her gray eyes.

"Daddy!" began Vesta sharply.

Phil and old Joe Bean stared wonderingly. The colonel had never been like this in the old days. He now rose, flung himself out of his chair, and stalked out of the room. An instant later they heard him thumping his way upstairs. Mrs. Drake soon followed. Joe Bean took his cue and departed.

"Cousin Vesta," Phil began sternly, "I'm very sorry for you, but at the same time exceedingly angry."

"Don't, Phil, please don't!" she begged. "I know what you would say. But home-coming hearts are happiest. I'll never be sorry that I stayed with dad and mumsey, for what would they do without me?"

"It isn't right for young folks to be sacrificed on the altar of old folks' self[illegible] your chance [illegible]"

"I know, cousin," she returned softly, placing her fingers on his lips, "but please say no more. I'm glad and proud and happy," she smiled bravely.

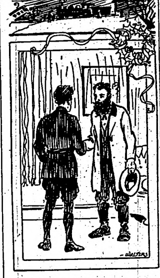
Thump! Thump! Thump! interrupted the knocker for the third time that evening, a most unusual thing at the Chestnuts. Even Phil was startled.

"I told you so!" he nodded with a grimace as he strode toward the door. Flinging it open he beheld two wee tots, a boy and a girl, standing on the front porch, clinging to each other timidly.

"We's losted!" piped the little girl, before Phil had time to voice his exclamations of surprise. "Is this the new heaven?"

"Guess it is!" greeted Phil cheerily. "Come right in and we'll talk it over. We'll ask the Christmas spirit, he'll know."

"Come right in, dears," echoed Vesta, taking them by their hands. In another instant she was down on her knees removing their little caps and coats, to which clung great flakes of snow.



"Sorry I Didn't Have a Boy Myself."

"Why, it must be snowing, after all," she cried happily. "I'm so glad for, as mumsey says, I never did like a green Christmas."

"It sure is snowing," announced Phil, opening the door and gazing into the night. Vesta peered over his shoulder to the bank of clouds rolling in from the east with little spits and flurries of snow. Just then the door banged shut.

"What's that?" demanded the colonel from the head of the stairs.

"Just the wind, daddy. It blew the door shut," said Vesta soothingly, placing her lips on her fingers with an admonishing "S-h-h-h-h. . . . . !" to Phil.

"Guess it's the Christmas spirit trying to get in, Uncle Henry," said the young lieutenant with a wicked little laugh. But the pajamaed figure holding a brass candlestick aloft had vanished.

"Is that our g'anpa?" chorused two little voices. "An' is dis heaven?" they demanded.

"Guess you're on the right track, little ones," cheered Phil. "Now tell us all about it," he encouraged as he and Vesta led them toward the hearth where they were soon nestling on the pair of old rose cushions Vesta had brought out for the occasion.

"Yes, tell us about it, dears," she urged gently, "and we'll see."

"We fordetted to say Merry 'tismus to God, an' Aunt Elsie and g'anpa—" said the little girl.

"We fordetted to say Merry 'Tismus . . . . ." echoed her brother. "Daddy John said we'd soon be in heaven and that we'd see God an' Aunt Elsie and g'anpa. You don't look a bit like your pictures," was the disappointed comment.

"But a lot nicer, you mean, brother," corrected the little girl. "Daddy John has annuzer picture zat looks like you, only zat lady has dimply smiles all the time," she ended, scrutinizing Vesta boldly.

Vesta laughed heartily and hugged the little girl to her breast. The child snuggled contentedly.

"She's slightly mixed on her geography," whispered Phil, "and thinks we are some persons else. We'll get down to facts after a while."

But the only information they could glean from the children was that their mother was in heaven with the angels and God. They were on their way there with Daddy John on the train, when there was a big crash. When they awoke Daddy John was gone. So they just went to find him.

"We must have been on the same train," said Phil, "but how those little duffers ever managed to get here is more than I know. It was some hike, even for my long legs."

"Oh, we didn't walk all the way. A kind man let us ride. When we saw the light in the window here, I knew we had come to heaven, so I just told the man to stop. And he did. 'So you're going to see g'anpa,' he said, and brother and I just said, 'Yes.'"

"So here we is!" beamed the little boy, in childish enthusiasm.

"Now tell us what your names are."

"Budge and Toddy!" they chorused gravely.

"But your other name, your daddy's name?"

"Daddy John!" they repeated firmly, nor could they be shaken in their assertions.

"An' we want to see God an' Aunt [illegible] in heaven. Can we hang up our stockings?" asked the little girl.

"You surely can, dears," said Vesta heartily.

"An' will we have a 'Tismus tree?"

"An' a Santa Claus?"

Vesta glanced at her cousin helplessly. She was now floundering in deep waters.

"Sure!" he pledged in his deep bass voice, "if you'll go to bed now and get to sleep. You can listen for the reindeers, and perhaps Santa Claus will fill up your stockings and bring you a Christmas tree."

"Phil!" ejaculated Vesta. "It isn't right to disappoint them."

He waved her aside. "That's all right, fairy godmother!"

"And will he bring our Daddy John?" asked the little girl anxiously.

"Who knows?" ventured Phil cautiously.

But this request was too much for Vesta, who had already hurried away toward the attic and a certain copper-bound trunk, full of small garments.

"Is that you, Vesta?" called her father's querulous voice.

"Yes, dad."

"Aren't you in bed yet?" he muttered.

"I'm going soon, dear," she lied blushingly, knowing full well that the two hours ahead would be busy ones.

Assisted by Phil she managed to get two wobbly heads and two pair of small limp arms and legs into the sleeping garments, for the sandman had already claimed them.

"I lit a fire in the spare room, Phil; we'll just carry them in there. Do be quiet, for dad mustn't know until morning," she whispered.

"The old reprobate . . . . . !" said Phil under his breath.

Vesta glanced at him reproachfully as he lifted the chubby figure of the little girl in his arms, while she carried the little boy. Shortly afterward Budge and Toddy were tucked away between warm blankets in the big four-poster in the spare room.

Back before the fireplace Vesta and Phil gazed blankly at each other.

"Didn't I tell you so?" volunteered the latter cheerfully. "Didn't I tell you that you're the goddess of the hearth? That the Christmas spirit would come your way tonight? That you were born to be the mother of little children?" he interrogated in staccato tones.

"But how are we to live up to our promises?" she laughed, ignoring his comments. "The House of Drake is embarrassed by its shower of blessings. I have no doubt that we are entertaining angels unawares, but now that you have succeeded in inducing the Christmas spirit to tarry, why not try your magic on Santa Claus and bid him bring us a tree?"

"I lose no time in accepting the commission. Behold in me an impromptu Santa Claus, ready to do the bidding of the vestal virgin. Now for some druid to lead the way to a forest of young balsams."

"At your service!" laughed Vesta gaily. "It is but eight o'clock," she said, glancing at the old banjo clock over the mantel. "I have an inspiration. Come!" she commanded, snatching her tam-o'-shanter and coat from the halltree, at the same time handing Phil his own coat and hat. Five minutes later they were on their way across lots to the balsam grove on the hillside, armed with the sharpest ax in the colonel's toolchest. Soon a small but symmetrical tree was laid low.

"So far, so good!" breathed Phil cheerfully, shouldering the embyro Christmas tree. "I declare it's worth a trip to France, with a train off the track, to have this experience. But how about a Santa Claus rig?"

"One thing at a time, Phil," gurgled Vesta, in so girlish a voice that the man was almost startled. "I declare this tarrying of the Christmas spirit, entertaining guests unawares, playing a vestal virgin and being a druid all in one night is rather exhilarating. Maybe we'll have a real Christmas yet. Poor dad and mumsey! I'm wondering. . . ."

"One thing at a time, Vesta," mocked Phil gaily. "I prophesy other surprises. When the Christmas spirit is abroad in the land no telling what miracle may happen. Even Uncle Henry may get a jolt into the Kingdom of Happiness. I'll sure do my part to bring this to pass."

As they passed down the hillside to the quiet street, now carpeted with snow, they heard a sound of sleighbells. Soon happy voices were caroling.

"Silent Night! Holy Night!" they sang.

The Christmas tree and holly man was still dispensing his wares when they at last reached the market, and soon Vesta's arms were laden with shining holly wreaths in which many red berries gleamed, while Phil with his balsam and other packages looked like an animated Christmas tree.

"Here's a sprig of mistletoe for you, Miss Vesta, and a Merry Christmas to you," said old Sam, with a sly glance at Phil.

"Why, I begin to feel like a little girl again," cried Vesta happily, as they trudged along through the snow toward home. "I never knew before that the Christmas spirit could be so nice. I declare I have little creepy feelings of joy all up and down my spine this minute."

"Same here!" agreed Phil. "But you'd better douse the glim, Vesta, in the language of the immortal Victor Hugo, or its flickerings will tell tales to your august parents. Some Christmas after all, eh?" he added as he tugged the tree up the steps of the front porch while Vesta held the door open. All was quiet within, but they [illegible] and a few seconds later the tree was set on its pedestal in the corner of the living room.

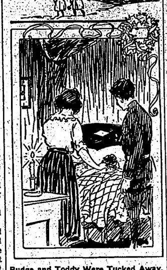
"Isn't it prettily shaped, and how deliciously spicy it smells in this warm room," Vesta bubbled as she sniffed the pungent air.

"Guess Budge and Toddy will think so, too," Phil said proudly as he unwound yard after yard of tinsel rope.

"Now, where's the menagerie?" asked Phil dubiously. "We didn't think of that, did we?"

"Oh—!" exclaimed Vesta, a little red flag flying into either cheek. "Wait a minute—they're in my room," she explained, slipping off her shoes and into the convenient felt slippers. In her room she paused just long enough to light her one bayberry candle before John's picture, just as she had done for ten Christmas eves, and to make the same wish. Five minutes later she reappeared in the living room with a bewildering array of rabbits, camels, elephants and teddy bears.

"'Pon my word!" began her cousin, staring at the apparition, "are you a vestal virgin, druid, or fairy godmother?"



Budge and Toddy Were Tucked Away.

"Just a friend of Santa Claus," she laughed triumphantly. "I made them all myself from some of dad's old flannel shirts, aided and abetted by paper patterns. Aren't these shoebutton eyes scrumptious? I did so hope that dad would relent and that Nora and the kiddies would be here," she added wistfully.

It was nearly twelve o'clock when they finished their decorations. To be sure, the tree was not the magnificent cataract of skates, sleds, and guns, such as had tumbled before their vision in years gone by, but in Phil's own words, it was "most creditable." When it had received the last pat of Vesta's hand, Phil went to the kitchen with her and helped make fudge in the form of chocolate rabbits. Apple bons, prepared for Nora's children, already hung on the well-laden branches of the tree. Joe Bean's turkey offering lay on the cold marble table in the pantry, the huge fowl stuffed and trussed, ready for the fire.

"Hark! Isn't that the carolers?" asked Phil as sleigh bells sounded in the distance.

"It surely is!" returned Vesta happily. "I hope dad won't mind."

"Pshaw! It will do him good. His soul has got warped a bit, that is all that ails Uncle Henry. He needs to have it ironed out with a little music. Maybe a carol or two will help him."

"The Christ-child walks the earth tonight, you know, Phil, looking for green wreaths in his memory, and he touches the lintel of every door that has a sprig of green upon it," she ended reverently.

"It came upon the midnight clear!" softly caroled the singers.

A window overhead opened noiselessly. That was all. Vesta clasped her hands gently. The carolers drew nearer.

God rest ye merry gentlemen,
Let nothing ye dismay;
For unto us a King is born,
This glad, sweet Christmas day. . .

The voices trailed away, then the window above closed very softly.

"Maybe the Christmas leaven is working," suggested Phil grimly.

"Now for a look at the kiddies," whispered Vesta, "to see if all is well."

"I want my Daddy John," whimpered Budge.

"I want my Daddy John," echoed Toddy, rolling over the other sleeping child.

"Poor little kiddies!" murmured Vesta, tucking them in.

"They'll forget all about it in the morning when they see their tree. It's the other fellow, the fond dad, who is doing the worrying. Gee! In all our excitement I forgot to call up the lost and found department at police headquarters. Believe I ought to do it yet."

"Do be careful that you don't waken dad and mumsey," warned Vesta, but Phil was already on the wire.

"Why, yes, they're here now—at Colonel Drake's, a boy and a girl, sound asleep. Yes, we're up yet, but they're all right. . . . . Oh, of course we have no objections if he can't wait until morning. . . ." he rang off.

"Well, the lost father is found," he shrugged ruefully. "You're destined to be a mother but for an hour. He is on the way here now—"

"Oh, the brute!" cried Vesta. "He wouldn't take them away from us tonight after all our work to make them happy. . . ." Her voice broke.

"Cheer up, cousin! He doesn't know about the tree yet. Maybe he, too, can be induced to accept your Christmas hospitality, since you are keeping open house."

Vesta smiled wanly, as she replenished the fire, tossing onto the coals a handful of phosphorescent powder, the colors of which flashed up instantly, illuminating the tree with a wonderful iridescent light. A long silence followed.

"High priestess of the sacred fire," began Phil gently, "fairy godmother, or whatever thou art, I hear the crunching of heavy footsteps on your gravel path. Shall I intercept the gentleman, and spare thy father's wrath?"

"Oh, do," begged she. "This Christmas of ours is getting rather interesting, isn't it?" she added with a forced laugh.

"Told you so! One can expect anything now," he prophesied as he tiptoed to the door and swung it open.

"I owe you an apology, for coming at this hour, but you can understand my anxiety, I am sure," began the caller.

At the sound of the deep, manly voice Vesta swayed like a lily on a tall, slender stalk. There was a blur before her eyes, and the sound of distant music in her ears. It was the carolers, of course, for she had always prided herself that she was not one of the fainting kind.

"Sweetheart Vesta!" came a faraway voice. "Beloved! Open your eyes. Look at me," he added compellingly.

"John!" whispered she, unbelievingly, "John!" a world of longing in the name. Suddenly she remembered, and drawing herself up proudly she led the way to the spare room. "I forgot . . . you came to get your babies. They are in there," she commenced dully. "Not anticipating your arrival, we trimmed a Christmas tree for them."

"That was just like you, Sweetheart Vesta," he said tenderly, linking her arm in his, "but it happens they are not my babies. They belong to my brother Luke, who died in France. Their mother died when they were born. I was on my way with them to spend the holidays with their grandfather and my sister Elsie in New Haven—"

"Oh . . . . !" Vesta's laugh rippled out like a Christmas chime. "Oh . . . . They said their names were Budge and Toddy, that they were on their way to heaven to see grandpa and Aunt Elsie in 'new heaven,' and they talked about Daddy John." But her voice was muffled on the shoulder nearest her. Phil had discreetly withdrawn.

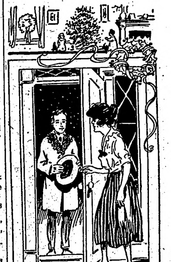
"Their names are Helen and John," he managed to say betimes, "and a funny little pair they are. They have insisted on calling themselves Budge and Toddy. It is a childish fancy from which we have been unable to shake them."

In the morning when the colonel and Mrs. Drake came downstairs, they were met with a vociferous, "Merry 'Tismus, g'anpa. Merry 'Tismus, g'anma!"

"What's that! What's that!" stormed the colonel as they hugged his legs and begged him to play "Ride a Cock Horse." "That I will, you young rascals," he began, "but it seems to me it's time for my daughter to make explanations. Ladies don't generally acquire a full-grown family over night!" he bantered.

With the exception of the most important item Vesta omitted no detail of the previous evening's experience.

"Be still, you young rascals!" blustered the colonel. "I can't even hear myself think," he said, pretending to be very angry and pounding on the floor with his stick. Whereupon they clambered over him all the more, begging tributes for their wonderful tree.



"I Owe You an Apology."

"Some Christmas tree! Eh, uncle?" said Phil merrily.

"It's not bad," admitted the colonel casually, "and by the way, Vesta, you might telephone over to Nora that we're expecting her and Don and the children early today. Then, when you're through with that I'd be obliged to you if you would telephone John Denton to come over to breakfast. I'd have asked him myself, but didn't want to disturb your little tete-a-tete when I came down at midnight to see what the fuss was all about . . . ."

"Merry Christmas, daddy, dear," cried Vesta gaily, implanting a kiss squarely on his mouth, which he straightway pretended to wipe off.

"Many happy returns, little girl, to you and John, eh, mother?" he said with a resounding thump of his stick on the hearth.

Christmas Festival

THE INSTITUTION of the festival of the birth of the Savior is attributed by some authorities to Pope Telesphorus, who died A. D. 138.

In the early days of the Christian religion it was one of the most movable of feasts, being often confounded with the Epiphany and celebrated by the eastern churches in April and May. In the Fourth century the urgency of St. Cyril of Jerusalem obtained from Pope Julius I. an order for an investigation to be made concerning the day of Christ's nativity. The result of the inquiry, made by theologians of the East and the West, was an agreement upon the twenty-fifth of December.

As told in the gospel of St. Luke, Christ was born in the night. Therefore, divine service is performed on the night of December 24-25. It is the custom in Roman Catholic churches to usher in Christmas day by the celebration of three masses, one at midnight, the second at early dawn, and the third in the morning. This custom dates from the sixth century.

Preparatory to Christmas the bells are rung at midnight throughout England and the continent. After the solemn celebration of the mass in the churches of the continent, which are magnificently adorned for the festival, it is customary for the worshipers to partake of a collation.

Christmas Games

MISTLETOE. Hang it up. Form a circle. A slipper is required. Also a nice, slippery floor. The first player slides the slipper. He tries to land it under the mistletoe. If he fails another makes the attempt. If he succeeds there is a lively scramble. It concerns the young lady toward whom the slipper points. She must seize it and get away before caught. Then the guests are given humorous gifts (previously wrapped), and are admitted (one at a time) to the Christmas room to deposit them in the stockings.

Another jolly game is played with Christmas stockings, a number of which are previously hung up.

These are placed in a separate room and the name of the person for whom each is intended is concealed upon it.

Another Christmas stocking game calls for a huge stocking of tough tissue paper filled with toys of all kinds. Each guest is blindfolded, given a light rod or cane, turned three times around and told to hit the bag. The first to break the stocking gives the signal for a general scramble, each guest being supposed to get one of the trinkets or souvenirs thus scattered.

Brown Nut Sauce.

Melt two tablespoonfuls of butter, add two tablespoonfuls of flour and when well cooked add one cupful of beef stock, two tablespoonfuls of ground peanuts, one teaspoonful of salt and a dash of red pepper. Cook until thick and smooth.

A Christmas Dream

By LUELLA KERSTEN

THE spacious farm house living room was unlighted and quiet. The outlines of several large armchairs were visible here and there about the room and made it look temptingly restful. The table which stood between the two windows was not untidy but held several opened books and many letters strewn about a letter file.

One of the large armchairs stood in front of the massive coal stove in which the blue flames danced like little elves upon the red coals, defying heartily the howling wind outside. Some one seemed to have been present recently. The chair held a bath robe, the cord of which dangled carelessly on the floor, and the tassel of which rested upon an open letter below it. Some one had been reading old letters and that person was cozily nestled in the bath robe. His tousled head of grey rested on the back of the chair. He was sleeping and certainly was having the happiest of dreams for a smile took possession of his face. The flames joined in the happy mood by dancing higher and faster. Even peaceful and happy hours have endings. Mrs. Bohnenstock had come quietly into the room and gently shook her husband.

"No, no, Helen," said the man without opening his eyes, "I am too old to dance and romp."

"Helen? Whom are you talking of? I do believe you have been dreaming," answered his wife.

At the sound of her voice, he was entirely awakened and arose from the chair. He staggered about before he regained all consciousness and his arms and legs ached from their cramped position. "I guess I've been dreaming, Molly, it seems as though I'd been asleep for a whole year. Molly dear, why didn't you call me? My stock must be fed and it's way past feeding time now."

"Do not worry about your stock, George. It has all been taken care of. John Uglow came over this afternoon and we talked about our Christmases when our boys were small. When it began to grow dusk, he said that I should not disturb you and that he would feed the stock."

"Well, Molly, so you and John talked over the Christmases we had with our little boys," said Mr. Bohnenstock sinking back into his chair and beckoning his wife to sit on the arm of it. "I am glad to see that others miss those beautiful holidays and the whole month before, when the air was full of mysteries."

"Oh, George, now I know what you were talking of when I came to wake you," Molly said, running her fingers through his tousled hair. "Tell me about it."

"I was reading some of the letters from Henry, for I'd been thinking of him all day," began her husband. "The last letter I read was the one we got from him last year just before Christmas, in which he told us how he and Jane were planning Christmas for the youngsters, and how he hoped that another year he would be home with us. I sat here recalling the many Christmases you and I had planned for our children. Molly, do you remember the year we had the Uglow boys over for Christmas eve?" he excitedly continued, half rising from his chair as the happy past came back to his mind in jumbled snatches. "I can see them now, the four boys and two girls sitting around this very stove, telling the Christmas stories which they had learned in school. Then, how their eyes bulged and their mouths opened when Santa came into the room. The children danced with glee, but the girls were a bit timid. The boys, however, were real chummy and asked Santa many embarrassing questions about his trips to see the children. The youngest Uglow chap boldly asked, 'Why do you stay here so long when you have all the places to visit?' Santa immediately explained how quickly he could travel about with his reindeer, and that the time would come when he could go still faster, for an airplane would take him. Yes, Molly, I believe he will go in his plane this year. Each year we had a tree, which we both had picked out months before growing out in the woods. The apples from our trees, nuts that we gathered, popcorn we had carefully cared for and animal cookies watchfully baked, together with tinsel and a few other ornaments helped adorn the branches of our chosen spruce."

All this he said slowly, pausing now and then so that he could live it over again. He looked up into Molly's face, for she had been very quiet, and there he saw big tear drops rolling slowly down her cheeks, which now showed a delicate pink flush.

"Well, well, Molly," began her husband.

"Don't, George, I know it's foolish for me to cry, but I wish we could have a tree and children to fuss for. Christmas comes and goes now without much excitement and it makes me feel as though I'm getting awfully old."

"Molly, let's have a tree and we will get ready for Christmas just as we did long ago."

The next morning, the happy couple took a trip to the woods to choose a tree. By the twenty-second of December, all the things were finished. George found Molly sitting before the fire looking very sober.

"Molly, why do you look so blue? This is the time for everyone to be happy."

"I know it, but, George, I think our fun is over. All our planning is done and we have no one here to enjoy it. No children's voices to sing the lovely Christmas songs. Oh, I shall miss it," she said sobbing.

"We still have three days in which to find children. We are going to have a Christmas just as we want it. I feel as though this will be the happiest."

The next night, they again were cuddled in the big armchairs drawn before the stove. Both of them were deep in thought, wondering and hoping. Both of them started when the telephone rang, breaking up their thoughts. George answered and was astonished when he heard a telegram read to him. He hung up the receiver with a slam and ran over to Molly, threw his arms about her, picked her up and carried her around.

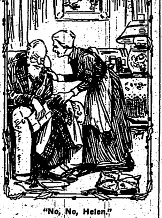
"George, tell me about it. What has happened?"

"Molly, I can't talk, I'm so happy. I knew we would find children but now I mustn't keep you in suspense any longer. It was a telegram like this. 'Family coming to spend Christmas on the farm. Arrive on noon train tomorrow. Henry.'"

Now Molly took her turn in rejoicing. She danced about the room. Her face was pink and her eyes sparkled like an overjoyed child's. "We must get the toys ready for the children," she said, and immediately went off to make a new dress for a doll.

While she sewed, she thought how glad she was that they had planned for a true Christmas.

The next noon, George and Molly were standing on the station platform, trembling with excitement. The bystanders could tell that something unusual was happening for the old people. Finally the train came.



"No, No, Helen."

"There they are! I see Jane and Helen. Where is Henry?" cried Molly.

"Here, Mother," answered her boy and he picked her up and kissed her. "Didn't know me, did you?"

Then she kissed Henry Junior, Helen and Jane. George picked up Helen and carried her to the sleigh. The rest followed them with the grips. The children enjoyed the ride home, the jingle-bells and big snow drifts.

That afternoon, the big doors to the living room were kept closed. The children suspected nothing for they were busy exploring the farm, and watching the pigs, calves, chickens, kittens and the big shepherd dog. Their grandmother and mother were undisturbed in their part of the work.

In the evening after they came from church, the doors to the living room were opened; the children were so happy that they danced about the tree and excitedly grabbed one parcel after another. In their excitement they could not untie the packages so their father and mother and grandparents were called upon to help. Helen came to her grandfather with all of hers, but Junior was not so partial. After the children had seen all their presents, and the others had exchanged theirs, Helen and Junior sang songs and spoke Christmas pieces. Five-year old Helen did not know as many as Junior who was in the fourth grade, but she recited hers just as proudly.

After the candles were lighted, little Helen came tripping over to her grandfather, "Come dance around the tree with me and my dolly, Grandfather."

"No, no, Helen! I'm too old to dance and romp," he answered.

"George," interrupted Molly, "those are the same words you used the day I found you sleeping in the armchair after reading old letters."

"Well, well, that's so," exclaimed George. "This Christmas has been exactly as I dreamed it."

Henry leaned over and whispered to his wife, "I'm glad we came. I didn't know how much it would mean to them."

He Knows What They Like

Distributing Gifts

GOING to the post-office is a jolly method of distribution. Pasteboard and brown paper, aided by judicious grouping of chairs and tables, easily transform a room into a post-office, and a wisely selected postmaster may make the collection of mail an occasion of much merriment. Have general delivery and lock boxes, and at the general delivery window see that each person is properly identified.

A Christmas hunt is always exciting. The clue, given at the breakfast table, is written on a slip of paper in some such words as these: "Pass the parlor, shun the hall, seek the summer kitchen wall." In that vicinity the gift will be found, wrapped and addressed. It adds to the fun if the directions lead first to other rhymes, three or four being followed up before the hidden treasure is found.

The cobweb party is not new, but is always good sport and is especially adapted to Christmas festivities. The tangled threads may lead to the laden tree or to the bulging stocking hanging from the mantel-shelf.

Still another hunt takes the form of a polar expedition and is great sport in the country when there is snow enough for it. Immediately after breakfast the entire party sets out for a walk. When they turn toward home, the host or someone selected as guide informs them that supplies are hidden along the way in various caches and they will do well to look out for them. Each cache is merely a mound of snow covering lightly a quantity of gift packages, securely wrapped. There need be only three or four mounds and the gifts should be divided promiscuously among them. If the walk has been long, the first cache to be found—that is, the one farthest from home—may hide a box of cookies, which will be hailed joyfully and will make the gifts in the next cache an even greater surprise.

The last cache to be reached may be the centerpiece on the dining table. Here it should be of cotton glittering with diamond dust, with the pole rising from the middle of it, a fat, squatty pole with a jolly Santa Claus atop.

Small gifts may be concealed in a Jack Horner pie, brought to the table when dinner is finished. Choose a deep, round pan of a size to fit the number of the party and put into it the presents, each daintily wrapped and marked with the name of the one to receive it.

To a far-away relative may be sent the kiddies' latest photo (it may be only a snapshot if it be well taken) accompanied by a little verse after this sort:

We're very small, but we want to send
To our Auntie far away,
Some love, and a kiss, with a happy wish
For a Merry Christmas Day.

The Call of Christmas

UNTO us a Child is born;
In your hearts, while joys abound,
Christians on this blessed morn,
Let a place for Him be found;
His dear Name is in the greetings
Friends with friends exchange today;
Let not gifts or festive meetings
Steal from Him your thoughts away.

Unto us a Son is given,
God's Eternal only Son;
Bonds of Sin by Him are riven;
Grace for man by Him is won:
He in love becomes our Brother,
Virgin-born of Adam's race;
Truth and mercy meet each other;
Righteousness and peace embrace.

Unto us a Child is born;
Unto us a Son is given;
Church and home with boughs adorn,
From our hearts all ill be driven:
Go we forth with joy to meet Him,
In His temples here below,
As the Shepherds went to greet Him,
Nigh two thousand years ago.

Chestnuts Stewed in Gravy.

Boil the large chestnuts for ten minutes, take them out, shell and peel them, having care to break them as little as possible. Skim and strain the liquor in which the giblets were boiled, season it to taste with salt and pepper, and to a pint of it add a tablespoonful of browned flour rubbed smooth with a teaspoonful of butter. In this gravy place the peeled chestnuts and let them simmer ten or fifteen minutes at the side of the stove. Serve as a vegetable.—The Delineator.

Chocolate Caramels.

Put into a granite saucepan one cupful of finely broken or grated chocolate, one cupful of molasses, the same amount of rich milk and sugar and two heaping teaspoonfuls of butter. Stir over a slow fire until thoroughly mixed, then boil slowly until it cracks when dropped into ice water. Turn into greased tins and mark into squares before the mixture becomes cold.

Conserving the Tablecloth.

When the tablecloth is partly worn cut an inch off one side and one end, and make a new hem. When it is ironed the creases will come in new places and the wear thus be redistributed.

Tennis in Ancient Days.

Henry VII was a special devotee of tennis, and had a court built for himself at Windsor, whilst Henry VIII it was who built the famous court at Hampton court, where it may be seen to this day. Tennis was indeed ever a game of kings and princes. Kings of England and kings of France vied with one another in their devotion to it, whilst the courts of both countries followed the royal lead. The faithful Pepys is peculiarly faithful in his references to tennis.

GREW WARY OF THAT LAUGH

Lloyd George's Infectious Merriment Became a Matter of Suspicion to Italian Statesman.

Mr. Bonomi, the new Italian premier, is reported by L'Europe Nouvelle to have derived much entertainment from his attendance at the recent Paris conference of the supreme council. The two things that impressed him most were Lloyd George's laugh and Briand's voice, says the Living Age.

In fact, the British premier has a remarkable laugh, which shakes off his glasses, closes his eyes and convulses his whole person. It was so contagious at first that Bonomi invariably laughed with his colleague; but he seems to have become wary at its frequent repetition. Briand's voice produced an equally powerful impression upon the new premier. One of the Italian experts remarked that it nearly made Bonomi vote in favor of assigning the "industrial triangle" of Upper Silesia to Poland.

A French expert argued that the Silesian peasants were the only real natives of the country, that the city people were really immigrants and their factories and shops should be regarded as "due solely to the hand of man." Lloyd George adverted to this in his principal speech: "If the factories and shops in the cities are 'due solely to the hand of man,' doubtless the pigpens in the country are due solely to the hand of God," and he burst into a roar of laughter, in which Mr. Bonomi joined.

Learning "By Heart."

This expression comes down to us from the day when the heart was thought to be the seat of the emotions. The desire to commit anything to memory was thought to be prompted by the heart.

Difficulties Have Value.

A happiness that is quite undisturbed becomes tiresome; we must have our ups and downs; the difficulties which are mingled with love awaken passion and increase pleasure.

Feet Are Natural.

ART IN SIXTEENTH CENTURY

Was Easily the Most Flourishing Period That Has Been Known in Modern Times.

It was in the Sixteenth century, at the close of the Middle ages, when all necessary material conditions had been fulfilled, that art entered upon the most flourishing period it has known in modern times. The transition from the Middle ages to the Renaissance was a great step in advance.

During this period art began to manifest itself in fresco painting, vault painting and the use of gold upon ceilings in Italy. Genoese and Venetian textiles also began to supplant panelings in the homes and in public buildings. Pictures and curtains were used extensively and the general use of carpets is said to have been pushed to the extreme of luxury.

The Renaissance treated the cabinet as it had treated the bench and the chest. It loosed it from its actual and imaginary connection with the wall and the wainscot and gave it individuality. Despite the multiplication of chairs, benches continued to be very common pieces of furniture in Renaissance homes.

SEA PAVED WITH GOLD.

Alaska prospectors, who were able recently to work, for the first time, Turnagain arm, that branch of the sea which the government railroad touches, report that the body of water is almost literally "paved with gold."

For years, until the railroad penetrated the section, the six-foot tides that rush up the arm, swamping small boats, have kept miners out. Now they are going in over the railroad and report several rich finds made in the arm at low tide. Rich gravel, it is said, lies off-shore. One vein, near Girdwood, assays $160 in gold per ton. The vein is covered by high tide.

POLICE TO HAVE MEDICINES.

It is proposed that each of the principal police stations of Paris, France, should have a supply of all medicines likely to be needed in an emergency, and that they should be dispensed on the spot by a qualified chemist, who would be attached to the force and paid by the municipality.

Machine Ties a Square Knot.

One of the new applications of small motors is the tying of bundles. It takes an expert to tie a bundle properly by hand. It seemed to be one of the hand operations that would not soon be usurped by a machine, yet here is a parcel tier driven by a half horsepower motor that automatically ties and releases each bundle or box placed on its table. Moreover, the machine may be depended upon to tie a square knot and after the tying is completed the parcel is thrown off to make room for the next.

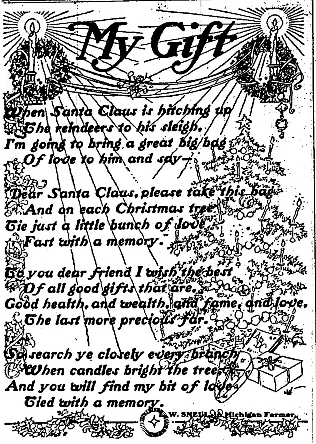
CHRISTMAS GREETINGS



My Gift

When Santa Claus is hitching up
The reindeers to his sleigh,
I'm going to bring a great big bag
Of love to him and say—

"Dear Santa Claus, please take this bag
And on each Christmas tree
Tie just a little bunch of love
Fast with a memory."

To you dear friend I wish the best
Of all good gifts that are,
Good health, and wealth, and fame, and love,
The last more precious far.

So search ye closely every branch
When candles bright the tree,
And you will find my bit of love
Tied with a memory.

The Most Generally Observed of All Festivals

CHRISTMAS is of all the festivals the most generally observed in the western world. It is the universal holiday of Christendom, and the general phases of its observance are in their essentials similar in all countries. It is a sort of common ground on which we all meet for, at least, one day in the year.

In its religious aspect the festival is a remembrance of the Christian faith—the gift of God to the world of a divine Savior. Out of that central and dominant idea, no doubt, grew up the practice of selecting Christmas, above all other seasons, as the time for friends to bestow gifts upon one another, and, for all who can, to extend charity to those in need.

Although not so old as the religious feature, the domestic and social features of the festival date back to very early times, at any rate, to times that are early in our history.

For centuries Christmas has been pre-eminently a season of home-gathering, when absent ones return and the family circle is once more completed, or as nearly completed as the changes and chances of life make possible. With home-coming was associated good cheer, and so Christmas came to be a season of feasting and merrymaking.

In England during the Middle ages, and for many generations after the Middle ages had closed, the Christmas season, which included at least a whole week, and liturgically 40 days, was given over to merrymaking of various kinds, some of which have gone the way of many of the customs of our forefathers. For instance, there was the bringing of the Yule-log to be lighted on the fireplace on Christmas eve with much ceremony and rejoicing. We have no Yule-log for there are but few fireplaces now. The name of the log recalls another name for Christmas, which was anciently called and is still known as Yule-tide or Yule-time.

Christmas.

The origin of Christmas or Christ's-mass, so called with reference to the last words of the chief religious service of the day according to ancient ritual, "Ite missa (or massa) est," is to be found in the second chapter of St. Luke's Gospel. Its observance is not a development, having existed from the earliest days of Christianity. In fact, in many respects there has been devolution instead of evolution in the manner of its celebration.

Using Old Stockings.

It is interesting to know and economical to follow the many little odds and ends that can be made out of old stockings, silk or lisle. So often they are thrown away because of endless holes and runs—not good, you think, for anything—but if this kind is saved until a fairly good pile has been accumulated one can start a very fine silk rag rug. The more numerous the colors the prettier the rug.

CAROLS AS PART OF THE CHRISTMAS SERVICE.

THE origin of the Christmas carol is uncertain. It is probably as old as Christianity. Indeed, Bishop Taylor in his "Great Exemplar" remarks that the first carol is the hymn of the angels to the shepherds in the plains of Bethlehem:

"Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."

In the Fifteenth century carols were widely used throughout Europe. In fact, the first pieces printed by the very first printers were carols. In one of the oldest collections appears "The Boar's Head," which used to be sung as that old dish was carried to the table during the Christmas revelry:

The Boar's Head in hands I bring
With garlands gay and birds singing;
I pray you all to help me sing
"Qui estis in convivio!"

"The Boar's Head" represents one of the convivial carols or "jolie chansons," which had their place at the feasts, dances and other gay festivities of the Christmas season.

In Shakespeare's time bands of itinerant singers used to wander about the streets and make their carolry a pretext for getting money.

During the Eighteenth century carolry declined greatly, and many of the quaint old customs which had marked Christmas festivals for centuries became obsolete.

Carolry still exists in parts of England.

In Wales it has been preserved to a still greater extent, while Ireland, too, has her Christmas caroling in time-honored style. France has its "Noels," and in Italy Christmas carols have been sung since the time of St. Francis of Assisi, who discovered the power of sacred song in the vernacular.

In churches all over the world many of the delightful old carols are now a part of the Christmas service.

Good Reason, Too.

At Christmas the children of a certain provincial school tried to collect money by going from house to house singing carols and snatches of hymns. Many complaints reached the rector's ears of bands of youngsters scampering through the first verse of "While Shepherds Watched," and then violently ringing the doorbell. So he instituted inquiries on the next occasion he visited the school.

"Why is it," he asked, "that, instead of singing the hymn in a reverent way, you scamper through one verse and then ring the bell?"

Silence reigned for a short time. Then a shrill voice from a small boy at the back of the room was heard in explanation:

"Please, sir, it's 'cause they always lets the dog loose at the second verse."

Charity in the Heart.

'Tis the season for kindling the fire of hospitality in the hall, the genial fire of charity in the heart.—Washington Irving.

Under the Holly Bough

YE WHO have scorned each other,
Or injured friend or brother,
In this fast-fading year;
Ye who by word or deed,
Have made a kind heart bleed—
Come gather here.
Let sinned against and sinning
Forget their strife's beginning,
And join in friendship now;
Be links no longer broken,
Be sweet forgiveness spoken,
Under the holly bough.

Ye who have loved each other,
Sister and friend and brother,
In this fast-fading year;
Mother and sire and child,
Young man and maiden mild,
Come, gather here.
And let your hearts grow fonder,
As memory shall ponder
Each past unbroken vow;
Old loves and younger wooing
Are sweet in the renewing,
Under the holly bough.

Ye who have nourished sadness,
Estranged from hope and gladness,
In this fast-fading year;
Ye with o'er-burdened mind
Made aliens from your kind—
Come, gather here.
Let not the useless sorrow
Pursue your night and morrow,
If e'er you hoped, hope now—
Take heart, uncloud your faces,
And join in our embraces,
Under the holly bough.

—Charles Mackay.

Birds and Animals Share Christmas

CHRISTMAS is not merely a festival celebrated by and for man alone. Among the folk lore of other countries are several quaint stories in which animals and birds give evidence of their adoration. A well-known Bosnian legend offers a version of world adoration—they claim that on the holy day "the sun in the east bowed down, the stars stood still; the mountains and forests shook and touched the earth with their summits, and the green pine tree bent; the grass was beflowered with the opening of blossoms; incense sweet as myrrh pervaded upland and forest; birds sang on the mountain tops and all gave thanks to the great God."

In Bosnia on Christmas day a sheaf of rye is put into birds' nests and bird houses for the birds' Christmas. A stranger, stranded in a Michigan town was once startled to see a sheaf of rye in a bird box. He knew immediately that one of his kind lived there and was keeping Christmas in the old way.

An old Indian legend tells us that on Christmas night all the deer in the forest kneel in adoration before the Great Spirit. Woe to him, however, who tries to spy upon them. He is punished with perpetual stiffening of the knees.

Many people of the old world claim that on Christmas night animals are gifted with speech, but none must trespass or eavesdrop.

The Joy of the True Spirit of Christmas

ARE you willing to forget what you have done for other people and remember what other people have done for you; to ignore what the world owes you, and to think what you owe the world; to put your rights in the background, and your duties in the middle distance, and your chances to do a little more than your duty in the foreground; to see that your fellow men are just as real as you are, and try to look behind their faces to their hearts, hungry for joy; to own that probably the only good reason for your existence is not what you are going to get out of life, but what you are going to give life; to close your book of complaints against the universe, and look around for a place where you can sow a few seeds of happiness—are you willing to do these things even for a day? Then you can keep Christmas.

Are you willing to stoop down and consider the needs and the desires of little children; to remember the weakness and loneliness of people who are growing old; to stop asking whether your friends love you, and ask yourself whether you love them enough to bear in mind the things that other people have to bear on their hearts; to try to understand what those who live in the same house with you really want, without waiting for them to tell you; to trim your lamp so that it will give more light and less smoke, and to carry it in front so that your shadow will fall behind you; to make a grave for your ugly thoughts and a garden for your kindly feelings, with the gate open—are you willing to do these things even for a day? Then you can keep Christmas.

Are you willing to believe that love is the strongest thing in the world—stronger than hate, stronger than evil, stronger than death—and that the blessed life which began in Bethlehem nineteen hundred years ago is the image and brightness of the eternal love? Then you can keep Christmas. And if you can keep it for a day, why not always? But you can never keep it alone.—Dr. Henry Van Dyke.

Soft Sugar Vanilla Wafers.

Cream together two cupfuls of soft sugar and one cupful of butter. Add the yolks of five eggs well beaten and a generous flavoring of vanilla. Sift two teaspoonfuls of baking powder and one-half a teaspoonful of soda with two cupfuls of flour. Add alternately the well-beaten whites of the five eggs and the prepared flour with enough more to make a soft dough. Roll thin and cut in small rounds, diamonds or squares.

Distributed Cares.

"Why are June weddings so popular?"

"Because of the natural tendency of conditions to adjust themselves. People shouldn't be expected to buy wedding presents and Christmas presents all at the same time."

DECEMBER ACROSTIC

IF THE following words are arranged in order, one under the other, their initials will spell the name of something relating to Christmas. As a further help, we will say that each word has three letters:

1. A small insect.
2. Word used in speaking of ocean tide.
3. More than one.
4. Word used in asking questions.
5. Adjective meaning not rigid.
6. A small part of the body.
7. Head covering.
8. Verb to be mistaken.
9. Month of the year.—Successful Farming.

Christmas Is Children's Day

THE message of Christmas is love. Its emblem is radiant, thankful, contented childhood. Without love and without children there could be no real Christmas. The form might survive but the substance would be lacking.

Unhappy must be the adult who cannot make himself a child again in spirit at the Yuletide. For Christmas is the universal children's day. Men and women are superfluous except as they make themselves partners with those whom the day glorifies.

Let us, then, lay aside the affectation and arrogance of manhood and womanhood and be children again. Let us adopt their point of view and put ourselves in their places—in the places of these sons and daughters of ours and of the sons and daughters of our neighbors. It was only a year or so ago, as it seems, when we hung our well-worn stockings in a row along the mantel shelf, while our fathers and mothers looked on with unfeigned pleasure at the innocent confidence we showed in the morrow.

Even as you and I. It all comes back in a flood of memories. Life was simpler then. Our desires were less pretentious than those our children voice now. Modest remembrances they were that bulged toe and heel of the stockings mother knit.

Life and its circumstances change, but the essence of Christmas never. The same happy childhood, the same restlessness, the same snail-like creeping of time as the holiday approaches. The same parenthood, too—the same planning across the reading table after the boys and girls are abed, the same loving consideration of what this or that child most desires and how far the family purse can be stretched to permit some further purchase.

Every home is assured a Christmas if it has a great, warm heart pulsating in tune with the hopes and joys of childhood.

St. Nicholas, the Holy Man of the Fourth Century

IN THE entire category of the saints none continues to enjoy a more extended popularity than St. Nicholas, archbishop of Myra.

At this time, when preparations are being made for the celebration of the birthday of the Christ-child, it is particularly fitting that we recall something of the character of this holy man of the Fourth century and remember some of the legends which bring him so close to us at Christmas time.

Strange to say, while St. Nicholas is regarded as the special guardian of children, virgins and sailors, he came to be regarded as the patron saint of robbers, from an alleged adventure with thieves, whom he compelled to restore some stolen goods to their proper owners.

In various parts of the old world it is customary for the elder members of the family to place little presents in the shoes as well as the stockings of the younger relatives on the eve of St. Nicholas' day. In convents the young women used to place silk stockings at the door of the apartment of the abbess, with a paper recommending them to "Great St. Nicholas of her chamber."

While the emblem of the three golden balls is derived from the Lombard merchants, yet St. Nicholas is frequently pictorially represented as bearing three golden balls or purses, the origin of which can be traced to an act of the saint which has come down to us in the form of an ecclesiastical notation.

THE 1800 CHRISTMAS

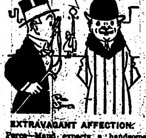
FIRST YULETIDE DINNER SERVED IN THE WHITE HOUSE.

Haunch of Venison Graced the Table Presided Over by the Wife of John Adams.

THE first dinner at Christmas given in the White House was that which took place in the year 1800, when John Adams was President and thrifty Abigail, his wife, sat at the head of the table as hostess. It was not a comfortable meal, although a splendid haunch of venison, the gift of Mrs. Washington, graced the board, and the country people of what Mrs. Adams called "the City in the Wilderness" had generously contributed gifts of all sorts to make the feast as toothsome as one could well wish.

The reception after dinner took place in the oval room, which is now the library, and was at that time barely habitable, though furnished, as Mrs. Adams wrote, in "warm crimson." The view from the windows on that first Christmas day would have disclosed what John Cotton Smith describes as "a deep morass, covered with alder bushes." The sidewalks were laid with chips from the stones with which the capitol was built. A wooden bridge spanned Black Tiber Creek, and low houses, also built of wood, were the residences of the congressmen.

The only brick dwellings were those that stood in Pennsylvania avenue, between Twenty-first and Twenty-second streets, six in number and built with money derived from the sale of lottery tickets. These were the surroundings of the first Christmas day of the Chief Executive of the young nation "whose policy in government has been more Christ-like than any other nation on the face of the earth which keeps the holiday."



EXTRAVAGANT AFFECTION.

Toys I Used to Know

WITHIN the shopping center here
I stand, a waif and stray,
And watch the throngs of women dear
Who pay and pay and pay.
Wide-eyed, I look about, but oh!
Where are the toys I used to know?

Swift an acrobat goes by,
To boyhood's marveling,
And fascinated eyes rove high
To watch the wonder thing.
But, heart of mine! across my sight
There floats a little homemade kite.

My boy demands a 'lectric train,
With fifty feet of track.
His modern spirit skims the plain
And brooks no holding back.
O Christmas when I used to bless
My key-wound fifty-cent express!

My little girl I must amuse,
And so I buy at view
A doll that wears French high-heeled shoes
And silken stockings too!
Yet lo! a vision from above—
My sister's doll, of rags and love!

O dear, dead days that brought to me
My earliest burst of speed,
When Santa placed beneath the tree
My first velocipede!
Yet my son tells the Christmas Czar
He's got to have a motorcar.

O tree, long since decayed and dead,
What joys you held apart!
Gee! how those mittens, thick and red,
Warmed both my hands and heart!
But now my wife I have to buy
A pair of auto gauntlets high.

Here, where the incandescents gleam
Amid the costly show,
I seem to see, as in a dream,
The penny candles glow.
Tree of my youth! my heart, grown new,
Again hangs on a branch of you!

—John O'Keefe, in New York World.

WHAT CHRISTMAS MEANS

CHRISTMAS is far other than a vision, a poetic rendition of the facts of life; it is an event set deep not only in the history of men but in their faith, their worship, and their way of life. They have never risen to its level; they have never, by united effort, given its spirit the tremendous effectiveness of concerted action; but, even in their infirmity of intention and their feebleness of practice, Christmas has given their life on earth a diviner meaning and a kindlier habit. It has enormously increased the value of that life; it is increasing the spiritual content of the thought of life in the minds of men; it is giving it a sweeter savor, a softer grace, a warmer atmosphere as men more and more interpret life in the light which streams from Bethlehem.—Hamilton Wright Mabie.

THE CRADLE-ROCKING

FORM OF WORSHIP AT CHRISTMAS IN GERMANY.

Resulted in the Church Later Gaining Much Stronger Hold on the People.

THROUGHOUT Germany, and also Italy and France there has been for some time a widespread use of the "crib." It is now universally diffused in the Roman church. Cribs are the delight of children who through the season of Christmas and Epiphany wander into the churches at all times of the day to gaze wide eyed on the lifelike scene and offer a prayer to their "Little Brother," as they call the Christ child. The use of the "crib," however, is by no means confined to churches. It is common in many homes both Catholic and Protestant.

There grew up in Germany, about the Fourteenth century, the extremely popular Christmas custom of cradle-rocking, a response to the people's need of a lifelike and homely presentation of Christianity. The crib became a cradle that could be rocked and the worshipers were thus able to express in physical action their devotion to the new-born babe. The cradle-rocking seems to have been done at first by the priests, who impersonated the Virgin and St. Joseph and sang a duet. The people and the choir took part in the singing. In time dancing, which was a natural accompaniment to festive song to the early Germans, became common around the cradle. Eventually the people were allowed to rock the cradle with their own hands.

It was by appeals like this to the homely instincts of the people that the church was able to gain a real hold over them, so that during the Fifteenth, Sixteenth and Seventeenth centuries Christianity became a genuinely popular religion in Germany. Dr. Andred Tille, a well-known Christmas historian, in an article on Christmas in Germany, makes a statement that is most interesting.

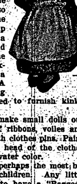
"In the dancing and jubilation around the cradle," he writes, "the religion of the cross, however much it might in its inmost character be opposed to the nature of the German people . . . was felt no longer as something alien. It had become naturalized but had lost in the process its very core. The preparation for a life after death which was its Alpha and Omega, had passed into the background. It was not joy at the promised redemption that expressed itself in the dance around the cradle, for the German has never learned to feel himself utterly vile and sinful. It was joy at the simple fact that a human being, a particular human being, in peculiar circumstances, was born into the world."

Home-Made Toys

ANYONE who has priced toys will realize that a very great saving is possible in making toys at home. For instance, from scraps that have accumulated one can make animal toys, as rabbits, dogs, cats, bears, elephants, as well as many of the character dolls that will prove to be a perfect delight to small children.

Patterns can easily be procured for making animal and doll toys from any place where patterns are sold. One clever mother went even farther by making "bunny," "cat" and "bow-wow" slippers for the youngsters that are a never ending source of pleasure. She outlined the face of a bunny, cat, or dog in black; made ears and fastened them on with buttonhole stitch, and used tiny shoe buttons for the eyes. The scraps she used in making the slippers and many of the animal toys were largely from odds and ends that are usually thrown away in making over garments.

A grandmother is making use of old black and white silk stockings by making them up into character dolls. The eyes, nose and mouth are embroidered, a gay calico dress is made, a white apron, and a red cape. This makes a typical mammy that will prove a great favorite with the children. Another idea which she carries out is to make the body half white and half black. That is, put a white dolly on one end and a black one on the other. Arrange the clothes in the middle of the body and make them suited to each character. As a suggestion, make a Dinah for the black part, so that when the black head is up the doll will be a pickaninny, and so that when the white head is exposed it will be a white dolly. A black stocking may be unraveled to furnish kinky hair.



One can also make small dolls out of odd scraps of ribbons, voiles and silk combined with clothes pins. Paint the faces on the head of the clothes pin with ink or water color.

Rag dolls are perhaps the most beloved by small children. Any little girl would love to have a "Raggedy Ann," for her very own. "Raggedy" is manufactured from unbleached muslin, stuffed with cotton; her features, hair and shoes painted on with water colors. She is especially proud of her feet, because they so closely resemble Charlie Chaplin's. Her eyes may look large and glaring, but even if they are two large shoe buttons, they are always full of love for her small owner. In making "Raggedy" be sure to stuff her neck, hands and feet full of cotton, so that she will not become limp and discouraged looking.

It is also possible to make a doll house and doll furniture that will be a delight to little girls. Get a box of suitable size and put partitions in it. Two rooms above and two below is the ideal arrangement. Scraps of wall paper can be used for covering the walls and small rugs can be made for the floors. These may be knit or crocheted out of rags, torn fine. The outside of the house can be painted some soft color. It should have three coats of paint to look well. The first coat should be a priming coat. For this use the same paint and color as for the final coats, only thin it down with turpentine; three pints to one gallon of paint is the proper proportions. After this has dried shellac all knots and sap spots. Then give it a coat of paint. If this looks well, another coat will not be necessary. If enamel is used for the work, apply a coat of flat paint first.

One can also use plain wall paper on the outside instead of paint, using narrow strips of a harmonizing color for the trimming. Often samples of wall paper can be used to advantage in the decoration of the interior and exterior of a doll house.

Doll furniture may be made from the thin boards that come in boxes. After it is made, enamel it to make it more attractive. Remember that one must always apply flat paint before the enamel. One mother who made her little girl a lot of doll furniture used odds and ends of gay cretonne instead of paint for covering it. Small cushions may be made of cretonne to fit in the little chairs or settees. One mother made a little sun parlor in the house and placed a tiny, swinging seat in it.

Compo board can also be used in making doll houses. It is light and one can easily use wall paper on both the inside and outside. Doll furniture may also be produced from it. Fathers will find it possible to make toy wagons, sleds and airplanes that will give a great deal of delight to the little boys. A grocery store can be made from a box that will prove to be a never failing source of pleasure, for all children love to play at "keeping store" and selling things.

Many things can thus be fashioned which will be durable, washable, unbreakable and will all make Christmas presents for the children that will delight them fully as much as the store toys.—M. Palmer in Successful Farming.

CANDY MADE AT HOME

HOW TO PREPARE SWEETMEATS FOR CHRISTMAS.

Box of Dainties Sure to Make One of the Most Appreciated Yuletide Presents.

A BOX of home-made candies is a welcome gift much appreciated at Christmas. There is an art in preparing such a box for one's friends and the end gained is worth the trouble.

Candy boxes of any desired size can be purchased at a box factory, or boxes covered with the art crepe paper, sold at so reasonable prices nowadays, make attractive receptacles. A bolt of crimson baby ribbon, a few sprigs of holly and several sheets of white tissue paper will enable a dainty package to be sent from one's home.

In packing the candies it is wise to cut paraffin paper and stiff bristol boards to fit the boxes in layers. A sheet of paper, then the layer of board will keep the softer candies, such as chocolate cream, from crushing.

Uncooked candies are never palatable, and no amount of flavoring will mask a raw taste. On this account take the trouble to prepare fondant, which is the basis of all fine cream candies. It is not at all difficult to make if the instructions are correctly carried out.

A week before Christmas prepare the fondant, which can be placed in a jar; cover with a damp cloth and keep in a cool place until two days before Christmas, when it should be made up into the various confections. This time will allow the chocolate, used in dipping, to become firm.

Colorings for tinting can also be purchased at the druggists, and always state that they are to be used to color food to insure getting the vegetable coloring.

Red will produce any shade of pink, rose or scarlet according to the amount used. Violet will produce any shade from pale lavender to deep blue; pistachio or spinach will give green; egg yolk can be used for the yellows and a few drops of strong coffee will give a mode shade and chocolate will give the browns.

The following table may be a guide in flavorings: White—vanilla or almond; pink—strawberry, raspberry, rose; green—pistachio or almond; pale yellow—lemon; deep yellow—orange; mode—maple or coffee; brown—vanilla.—Elizabeth W. Morrison in the Housekeeper.

Worth Keeping.

The Christmas tree will soon be thrown
Out on the garbage pile;
The Christmas tree, but let us all
Freeze to the Christmas smile.

Who's Dolly Is You?

ORIGIN OF CHRISTMAS

FIRST CELEBRATION WAS HELD IN THE YEAR 98.

Forty Years Later Before It Was Officially Adopted as Christian Festival.

CHRISTMAS was first celebrated in the year 98, observes a writer, but it was 40 years later before it was officially adopted as a Christian festival; nor was it until about the Fifth century that the day of its celebration became permanently fixed on December 25. Up to that time it had been irregularly observed at various times of the year—in December, in April and in May, but most frequently in January.

In Rome the Saturnalia, or feast of Saturn, fell at about the same time as our Christmas, and it marked the greatest festival of the Roman year. The city abandoned itself to gayety. Universal mirth was the order of the day; friends feasted friends, and foes were reconciled. All social distinctions were laid aside. Work was stopped, and no war was ever entered upon at that time.

One by one other legends and customs have been disproved and overthrown, yet none has dared attack the legends and the customs sacred to Christmastide. It remains with us, and will always remain. Christmas marks the winter solstice. The days begin to lengthen, and the sun no longer journeys away from the earth, but enters upon its return. It is a promise of renewed light and warmth, of the approach of summer, and men hailed these signs with every expression of gladness.

When Christianity spread abroad, men adapted the old customs of their ancestors to the new order of things.

The word Yuletide, used to give a picturesque, oldtime flavor to the Christmas idea, comes from Yule, an old name for Christmas. The term springs from an English word used to designate the two months of December and January, one of which was called the "former Yule," the other the "after Yule." There is a legend which relates that it was the custom years ago for every Saxon household to burn the Yule log on Christmas eve. This was a great gnarled root or tree trunk, cut the day before Christmas and brought into the hall on Christmas eve with great ceremony and accompanied by music. Each member of the household would sing a Yule song, standing on the center of the log.

In Germany and other European countries it was believed by the children that the Christmas tree glittering with candles and brightness, and the gifts found beneath the tree, were the work of jolly old St. Nicholas, or Santa Claus, as we know him. This kindly saint was no legendary character. He lived about 300 A. D., and was a noted bishop of Asia Minor. He was looked upon as a patron saint of generosity because of his liberality. The idea of St. Nicholas traveling in a sleigh drawn by reindeer originated in the cold northern countries. The reindeer were the swiftest animals known, and they must needs fly like the wind to carry St. Nick the rounds of the world in one night.

Almost as important as the gift giving and gift receiving on Christmas day is the feast of dainties spread on that occasion. But even the Christmas dinner has its origin in the dim, distant past. Feasts were always the accompaniment of any festival. In Egypt, at the winter solstice, every family killed and ate a goose as a religious observance. We preserve the custom of eating fowl on Christmas, but the toothsome turkey has more generally supplanted the goose.

Cold Chicken Cutlets.

Cold boiled chicken may be mixed with crumbs, egg and cream until of a consistency to shape into cutlets. Dip these in hot fat. Serve with cream sauce or tomato sauce.

Our Greetings

In the Meaning of Christmas

IN THE true spirit of the occasion and with due appreciation of all it implies, we extend Christmas greetings to the readers of this publication. Christmas has a meaning possessed by no other holiday throughout the world. America has its national and special days, other countries have theirs; Christmas is the only one alike in spirit and celebrated in all Christian lands. So pure is its principle that it commands respect and admiration among people who worship their Creator in different ways from ours.

Christmas typifies all that is best in mankind. It is the culmination of the human mind throughout the ages dwelling upon the wonders and mysteries of existence, turning to a reverence for God and His representative on earth. It expresses the ascendency of spirit, the realization of men of their interdependency and their duty to one another; and so it is marked by the bestowal of gifts and other sentiments of benevolence and well wishing.

The makers of newspapers, concerned as they are with the doings, manifestations and thoughts of their respective communities and the world at large, and recording them in their more important aspects for the information, mayhap the education of readers, are brought into an intimate sense of the spirit and meaning of Christmas. Would that we could express to you all the good that we see in the hearts of men and the increased brilliancy behind a few shadows of the light which has upheld the world for so many centuries. In the happy auguries we see for the future, there is every reason to be merry.

Our Yuletide thoughts go out to the people of this community and our thanks are due the patrons and kind friends who have given us practical support or extended encouragement during the year. May this be the best Christmas you have ever spent, is our wish to all.

History of Light

It is rightly said that the caveman lived in darkness! When he had any light at all, other than faint beams of the moon, it must have been a smoking torch of knotted, bark-covered wood or clay vessel filled with dry twigs ignited.

Cat-tails soaked in oil were the next step forward and it is likely that all early lamps were oil burners. Centuries spanned the whale-oil and the coal oil lamps and the gas light, burning natural gas, supplanted both. The gas mantel was a big improvement on the open gas burner, but the modern incandescent electric lamp surpasses any artificial light ever known to mankind. The newest electric bulbs are frosted to insure a soft, restful light.

What else in your home gives as steady service and as much comfort and convenience at little cost as electricity?

FARM POULTRY

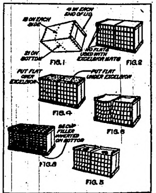
PREVENT BREAKAGE OF EGGS

Plans for Making Better Crates for Shipping Have Been Worked Out by Specialists.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

"Handling Eggs for Profit" is the title of a little mimeographed circular issued by the food research laboratory of the bureau of chemistry, United States Department of Agriculture, which gives directions and drawings for the construction of egg cases and outlines methods for packing the eggs so as to reduce loss from breakage while in transit from the producers to consuming centers.

The specialists in the food research laboratory have made a study of methods for packing and shipping eggs in order to reduce the great losses from breakage that have occurred in the past. This work has been done in all parts of the country in co-operation with railroads and with egg shippers.



The Right Method of Nailing Crates Is Shown in Fig. 1, Proper Methods of Packing in Fig 2, 3 and 4—Poorly Made and Packed Crates Are Shown in Figs. 5 and 6.

Experimental shipments in different kinds of shipping cases and with the different methods of packing the eggs in the cases have been made and the results compared. An instrument has been devised for measuring and recording the shocks to which cars containing eggs were subjected while in transit.

As a result of these experiments the specialists have recommended methods of packing eggs which reduce breakage to a minimum. These methods have been tried under a great variety of conditions, and have been incorporated as requirements in the railroad and express classifications for the transportation of eggs.

Nails in place save claims, it is tersely said; and, as shown in figure 1, the number and arrangement of these necessary in order to conform with the requirements of the express and consolidated freight classifications are as follows:

Threepenny nails, cement coated, with large heads.

18 nails for each side, 6 for each end, 6 in center.

21 nails for bottom, 7 in each end, 7 in center.

8 nails for top, 4 in each end, for flush cleat.

6 nails for top, 3 in each end, for drop cleat.

Egg packers are advised to be sure that they use the correct number of nails.

When 6 paper-covered excelsior mats are used, flats should not be placed between the mats and the fillers. When cupped trays made of compressed pulp are employed, it is best to begin by placing one 25-cup filler, receiving side downward, on the bottom of the case. Then place one 16-cup filler, receiving side upward on top, nesting it. Fill the cups with eggs and cover with one 16-cup filler. Then place one 25-cup filler, receiving side upward; fill cups with eggs and cover with a 25-cup filler.

Improper packing invites breakage, and figure 5 illustrates a poorly packed case. Sometimes an extremely thin layer of excelsior, many times a small amount of loose paper, or perhaps nothing at all is placed on the top and bottom, leaving the case loosely packed and the chances for breakage and loss are great. Very frequently such poorly packed cases have broken and stained fillers and flats, and such a combination greatly increases the probability of damage.

HAD GREAT FEAST OF SALMON

Citizens of Bremerton, Washington, in Luck Through Error Made by Fish Coming to Spawn.

A seething mass of silvery salmon was impounded in the big dry dock at Bremerton, Wash., when the revenue cutter Bear was admitted for repair.

When the pumps had started to lower the water the salmon leaped up the steep sides of the drydock in desperate attempts to escape into deep water.

Navy yard employees, sailors and marines did not wait for the water to be entirely pumped out, but waded into the mass of silver sides, picking the best salmon.

They are the fall or silver salmon, which make their appearance in Puget sound in late fall. It is believed the fish, in seeking the mouth of a spawning stream, mistook the yawning opening of the dry dock for one.

More than a thousand salmon were secured from the 1,100-foot dock, and there was an unmistakable odor of frying fish in the Navy Yard town for an entire day.

A few months ago a fox-shark or thrasher was imprisoned in this dock and gave employees some exercise overpowering it. He was vicious, fairly leaping out of the lowering water in an effort to fasten his fangs in his captors.

Ban on Fairies.

Fairy tales are no longer allowed to be told to children in Russia. The minister of education for Bolshevists has issued an order that fairies or princely heroes are not to be mentioned, and do harm, and are therefore forbidden.

Instead of fairies, children must be told of "scientists and leaders who have served humanity."

Aladdin must not be misrepresented as a good-hearted prince who used his magic lamp for the good of all the people around him; he must be shown in his true [illegible] for he was a prince, and therefore an oppressor and a despot [illegible]

MENACE OF MONDAY MORNING

Writer Has Put Into Words What Doubtless Many Thousands Have Often Thought.

There is a menace about Monday morning which few have escaped.

It is a menace which in one guise or another clouds hundreds of millions of pillows, gives to the golden sunlight which filters through a billion panes the very hues and character of jaundice.

It is the menace of factory and workshop, harsh prisons which shut men and women from the green fields and the pleasant byways; the menace of new responsibilities to be faced and new difficulties to be overcome.

Into the space of Monday morning drain the dregs of last week's commitments to gather into stagnant pools upon the desks and benches of toiling and scheming humanity.

It is the end of the holiday, the foot of the new hill whose crest is Saturday night and whose most pleasant outlook is the Sunday-to-come.

Men go to their work reluctant and resentful and reach out for the support which the lunch hour brings.—From "Green Rust," by Edgar Wallace.

FAMOUS SOUTH SEA ISLAND

Tahiti Has Long Been Place of Interest—Visited During Centuries by Great Navigators.

Several eventful occurrences, more or less connected with Tahiti, have tended to increase its celebrity. Over two centuries ago, Quiros, the Spaniard, is supposed to have touched at the island; and, at intervals, Wallis, Byron, Cook, De Bougainville, Vancouver, La Perouse, and other illustrious navigators, refitted their vessels in its harbors. Here the famous Transit of Venus was observed in 1769. Here the memorable mutiny of the Bounty afterward had its origin. It was to the pagans of Tahiti that the first regularly constituted Protestant missionaries were sent; and from their shores also have sailed successive missions to the neighboring islands.

These, with other events which might be mentioned, have united in keeping up, the first interest which the place awakened.—"Omoo," Herman Melville.

PETRIFIED MEN IN CAVES.

Dr. Ales Hrdlicka of the National museum, Washington, has visited the Luray caverns, Virginia, for the purpose of examining and removing certain bones, inclosed in stalagmite, which were believed to be human. After considerable difficulties the entire deposit containing the bones was taken out in pieces, which showed the remains of most of the parts of a human skeleton, but no trace remained of the skull with the exception of a portion of the lower jaw. The specimens have been given to the museum for further study.

BOOKS AT FOUR CENTS EACH.

Bargains in leather-bound books are rarely obtained nowadays, but a writer to the London Sphere makes the following interesting statement on the subject: "At an auction of the library of Lord Carew at Castle Boro, Enniscorthy, I bought about 1,200 volumes of books from the library. These were all put up together, and went for £9. They are beautiful volumes, all bound in full polished calf and beautifully tooled. They date from 1800 to 1840, and include sets of Swift, Burke, Scott, Burns, Lingard, etc."

UNEMPLOYMENT NOTE.

"Times must indeed be hard," remarks a contemporary, "seeing that 22 letters of the alphabet are out of 'work.'"

Looking into the matter we find that out of the twenty-two letters thus reported idle, seven are in "employment," two of them doing double service.—Boston Transcript.

ITS GLORIES DEPARTED.

For one of Scotland's ancient seats, the castle of Fiddes, Kincardineshire, it was urged at the valuation appeal that £4 ($20) a year was fair rental. It was stated that farm workers used the castle as a living place, and that the top rooms were in possession of wild birds. One room was reserved for the proprietor, John Monro.

Bear Invaded a Flivver.

Even bears like motorcars, as is proved by an incident which occurred in Giant forest, California. A sedan was left at the foot of Moro rock while the occupants climbed the stairway for the glorious views of the Saw Tooth range and the San Joaquin valley. On their return they found a black bear cub comfortably seated inside the car, which he had entered through an open window. Bruin was licking up the last of the sandwiches in the lunch and was persuaded to leave his comfortable quarters only at the point of a pole.

Starting on the Seventh New Year of Our Existence

This is the season of the year when one would lay aside the routine affairs of every-day business to greet one's friends with a hearty hand-shake. We'd like to greet you that way and tell you personally how much we really have enjoyed doing business with you during the past year. It is as great a pleasure to wish you well as to serve you well, and we hope that the NEW YEAR holds only the best for you.

The Little Stenographer of Brockton

By WILL T. AMES

(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"But, mother, I love her." Philip Gunter looked imploringly at his mother, an expression of suffering in his fine gray eyes.

"You don't really. No son of mine could possibly love a motorman's daughter. And think of the opportunities you have and are throwing them away for a little, middle-class, Brockton stenographer."

"Mother, I can't let you talk like that about Edith, and I'll ask you to avoid mentioning her in the future."

"Holty tolty! How pompous we are, and as surely as you do marry her I'll disinherit you and you can have love in a cot—the real thing."

"I don't care a snap of my finger whether you disinherit me or not."

With finality he rose to go, and frantically Mrs. Gunter cast about for another line of tactics.

"Ah, but Phil," she exclaimed, dropping her haughty manner and holding out her arms pleadingly, "you know how I love you, my only boy, and this thing will kill me. It will grieve me to death—you know my heart is bad—and my whole life is wrapped up in you. I lie awake at night dreaming about you and planning your future."

Philip winced and a cloud passed over his clean open face as he rose and put his arm about his mother.

"There, there, Momsy, don't get so worked up."

A maid tapped at the door and presented a card.

"Heavens! Mrs. Mangston's downstairs. Go and talk to her, Phil. I'll come in a minute."

Grateful, for the escape, the young man greeted the caller warmly.

"How's it going?" the lady asked with motherly concern.

"Worse than ever. She's just made a dreadful scene and I feel like a murderer."

"Sh-h-h-h, here she comes."

"My dear Mrs. Mangston, what a pleasure this is!" said the hostess cordially.

With a bow Philip excused himself and soon the two were deep in conversation.

"Yes," said Mrs. Gunter bitterly, "the boy's determined to marry this little stenographer in Brockton and as surely as he does it I'll cut him off without a farthing."

Her voice shook as she spoke and the heavy diamond brooch sparkled and glittered with the rise and fall of her breast.

"Even if you do cut him off that won't prevent his marrying her. What you seem to want to do is to prevent the match," said Mrs. Mangston thoughtfully.

"But how?" asked the other desperately.

"Another girl is usually the best cure," remarked the caller.

"But he says he's sick of girls in his set. He calls them artificial and empty-headed and won't look at them any more."

"Of course not; it'll take some new girl that'll sweep him off his feet."

"But where can we find such a creature?"

"Let me think." Mrs. Mangston puckered her brow as she stared absently at the floor. "Now, I have a sister who has just moved here," she went on after a moment, "and it seems to me that she said that she was going to have a little girl visiting her next week. I might get up a dinner in her honor and invite you and Phil."

"That would be wonderful if you could," said Mrs. Gunter, enthusiastically.

"Good! This girl's coming Monday; let's make the dinner Wednesday."

"You're really too kind," smiled Mrs. Gunter as they parted.

"Not in the least. I'm simply so devoted to Phil that I would do anything in the world to help him out."

Anxiously Mrs. Gunter waited for the appointed time, and after much coaxing, persuaded her son to accompany her.

"Dinners are always a bore, and I know more girls than I want to know," he grumbled as he jerked on his dinner jacket.

They arrived punctually and with covered eagerness Mrs. Gunter watched the meeting between her son and the girl and was gratified to note a glint of admiration in Phil's eyes as he took Randolph Parker's hand. Later, she decided that she had never seen him so brilliant and entertaining as he was at dinner that night.

"It's working beautifully," she whispered to her hostess.

"But she's such a lovely girl, who could help being gone over her?" replied Mrs. Mangston.

"Who, indeed? Now, why couldn't he have fallen for a girl like that in the first place? How long's she going to stay?"

"Two weeks."

"Better than nothing."

As they took their leave the mother rejoiced to hear her son say:

"Have you any engagement for tomorrow afternoon, or may I take you out in the car and show you some of our points of interest?"

"I shall be glad to go," said Randolph, as she extended her hand.

"Isn't she the most fascinating thing you ever saw? And what beautiful hair and eyes she has!" raved Mrs. Gunter on the way home.

"She's all right," answered the man carelessly.

"I'm going to give a reception and dance for her Friday night," his mother babbled on. "We must show her a good time—let her see how hospitable our city is to strangers."

As the days passed Mrs. Gunter went into ecstasies to learn that practically every day her son took Randolph out, although he never mentioned it to his mother.

"I think they're simply crazy about each other," Mrs. Mangston told Mrs. Gunter toward the end of the visit.

"If we could only make a match of it before he gets his mind on his old flame again."

"It isn't wise to show eagerness," admonished the other woman.

"I know it, but how can you help it when your heart's set on a thing? I don't know a girl I'd rather Phil would marry."

Randolph was persuaded to extend her visit another week, but at last the day arrived when she had to leave. Mrs. Gunter upbraided herself for having foolishly hoped to hear of their engagement.

"Three weeks," she scoffed to herself. "I'm an idiot to expect them to do it in so short a time."

She was interrupted by the sound of suppressed laughter followed by a knock outside her door.

"Come in," she called, and in walked Philip and Randolph holding hands like two school children.

"Mother, I want to introduce my wife!" said Phil happily.

"What! Why, it can't be possible! My dear children," she laughed and wept as she took them both in her arms. "I loved you the second I saw you, Randolph, and how I wanted you to marry Phil!"

"Mother, this makes me so happy," said her son, "because she's really Edith, you know."

Mrs. Gunter opened her mouth to speak, but no sound came forth as she stared at the girl incredulously. At last she spoke:

"I understand now why Phil was willing to give up his inheritance and defy his mother. Under the circumstances I should have done so, too."

"Mother, you're a regular trump!" exclaimed her son as he gave her a bear hug and waltzed her across the floor.

GREAT ENEMY OF HUMANITY

Spirit of Fear Holds Many Back From Heights Which They Might Easily Attain.

The greatest enemy of the human race is fear.

If we could banish fear in all its forms, it would mean more to civilization than any previous step in evolution. Health would be immeasurably improved; much unhappiness would be wiped out; efficiency would be greatly increased, and success would be the rule. With the removal of fear, would come real human brotherhood. True democracy would begin.

If you are not as well, as happy, as efficient or as successful as you would like to be, you may find the why in your fears.

"As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he"—physically, in disposition and in circumstances. Fear-thought is toxic, destructive and harmful. Some forms of fear-thought are worry, hatred, jealousy, despair, anger, melancholy, discouragement, depression, confusion, negativeness, nervousness, fretfulness, self-consciousness, lack of self-confidence and foreboding.

Fear of failure is also caused by not thinking well enough of one's self. To banish this and all other forms of fear, one needs another kind of thinking. Replace fear-thoughts with faith-thoughts and systematically cultivate the new line of thinking until it gets to be a habit.

Take a mental inventory today! Seek out your hidden mental weaknesses and expose them to the light of fearless analysis. Get to work upon your fears and run them out. Flood your whole mental region with faith.

Repeat daily and the results will amaze you.—C. Franklin Leavitt, M. D., in Forbes Magazine, New York.

Japan's God of Wealth.

More than 70,000 Japanese residents of Tokio, called at the shrine of Ebisu, God of Wealth, on the outskirts of Osaka, before noon on the Japanese New Year's day. They knocked on the walls of the shrine with wooden mallets and called upon the God to bring them riches during the coming year. All the gods of Japan probably receive more homage January 10 than any other day of the year, that being the first special god's day of the calendar. Ebisu is very popular in the Osaka district, the rich industrial section of the empire. In Tokyo, although he has several shrines, the Japanese place more faith in the power of Otorijinsha to bring them fortune.

Argonne.

The silver striper was an honest man, but he was in love with a girl who demanded deeds of daring.

"Tell me," she breathed, "what was the greatest battle you were in?"

"Ah, g'wan," he replied with embarrassment.

"My hero," she cried, falling on his neck, and they were married next month.—American Legion Weekly.

Physiological Reading.

Two pupils in a primary school in Ohio were encountering difficulties with their "First Reader."

"Tommy," asked one of the other, "how can you tell which is a 'd' and which is a 'b'?"

"Don't you know?" returned Tommy. "Why the 'd' is the letter with its stomach on its back."

History of Light

It is rightly said that the caveman lived in darkness! When he had any light at all, other than faint beams of the moon, it must have been a smoking torch of knotted, bark-covered wood or clay vessel filled with dry twigs ignited.

Cat-tails soaked in oil were the next step forward and it is likely that all early lamps were oil burners. Centuries spanned the whale-oil and the coal oil lamps and the gas light, burning natural gas, supplanted both. The gas mantel was a big improvement on the open gas burner, but the modern incandescent electric lamp surpasses any artificial light ever known to mankind. The newest electric bulbs are frosted to insure a soft, restful light.

What else in your home gives as steady service and as much comfort and convenience at little cost as electricity?

POULTRY

GEESE QUITE EASILY RAISED

Kept Generally in Small Flocks on Farms and Purchased by Experienced Fatteners.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

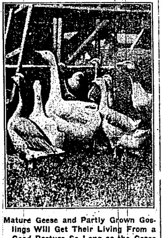
There is a demand usually for young geese from June to January, although most of them are sold around Thanksgiving and Christmas. Ten-weeks-old goslings of the largest breeds of pure-bred geese weigh up to ten pounds when forced for rapid growth, and sometimes are profitably marketed at that age as green geese. Large cities containing a foreign population offer the best markets for geese.

Geese usually are killed and picked the same as other kinds of poultry, but are much more difficult to pick than chickens. Generally the veins in the back of the mouth are severed with a long-bladed knife, followed with a blow on the back of the head with a short club. The wings are picked to the first joint, and the feathers are removed from the neck half way to the head, pulling with the feathers and not back toward the head. The soft pin feathers and fine down may be removed partly by rubbing the body with moistened hands or by shaving the skin.

The dry picking of geese is rather difficult. The most common practice is to scald or steam the goose feathers before picking. This can be done over a wash boiler three-fourths full of boiling water, laying the dead goose on a burlap sack stretched tightly over the boiler, and steaming first the breast, then the back, and then each side. The whole process of steaming will not take more than two or three minutes, and the goose must be kept moving to prevent scalding the flesh. The goose is steamed until the feathers can be pulled out easily, and the head usually is laid under the breast to keep the breast from scalding. After picking, the bird is singed over an alcohol flame, the alcohol usually being burned in shallow tin plates.

Another method for removing the down is to sprinkle powdered rosin over the body of the goose and dip it into hot water, which melts the rosin so that it and the down can be rubbed off easily, leaving the body clean. Geese may also be steamed by scalding slightly and wrapping the body tightly for five minutes or longer in burlap or cloth to allow the steam to work thoroughly through the feathers. Some markets prefer dry-picked geese, while in other markets no difference is made in scalded or dry picked.

Geese are raised successfully in all parts of the United States, but are most abundant in the South and the Middle West. Slightly more than one-tenth of the farms in the United States reported geese in the census of 1910.



Mature Geese and Partly Grown Goslings Will Get Their Living From a Good Pasture So Long as the Grass Remains Green.

Practically all there are in this country are in small flocks, and few, if any, farms are devoted entirely to their raising. Fattening, however, is conducted as a special business on a large scale in the producing sections, in which case the geese are collected from the general farms, usually over a large area, and fattened for a few weeks before they are killed.

On farms where there is plenty of grass or pasture land geese can be raised successfully in small flocks. A natural supply of water is, of course, essential. The birds are very hardy, both young and old, and rarely are affected by any disease or insect pest. Grass forms the bulk of the feed, and it is doubtful whether it pays to raise them unless it is available. They are the closest known grazers. Both mature geese and partly grown goslings will get their entire living from a good pasture, so long as the grass remains green. A body of water where they can swim is considered essential during the breeding season, and is a good feature the rest of the year.

MARKET UNDESIRABLE STOCK

Poultryman Should Go Over Flock and Cull Out Fowls Not Wanted for Winter.

If you have not already done so it will be well to cull out and sell off such stock as you do not intend to winter. In fact, it is generally desirable to have September and October cullings for the purpose of marketing such old and young stock as it will not pay to carry through the winter. [illegible]

SEEK TREASURE LONG BURIED

Search Being Made in Italy for Wealth Concealed Since Centuries Before Birth of Christ.

Robert Louis Stevenson or Alexandre Dumas could hardly have produced a more romantic story than that which comes from Bisceglie, in the province of Bari, writes a Rome correspondent.

A week or two ago an Italian widow returned from Jerusalem declaring that she was in possession of an old parchment written in Italian, and given to her father by a monk of Bisceglie, which contains indications of the whereabouts of an enormous hidden treasure.

Until recently the widow has not had enough money to carry out the excavation for the treasure, which is said to consist of 150 silver vases and 20 other vases full of gold coins, 31 of silver, five of antique works of art, 30 boxes of jewels, and a large earthenware vessel full of pearls. Now the excavation has begun.

According to telegrams from Bisceglie the first indication mentioned in the parchment—namely, a large stone with a serpent engraved upon it—has already been discovered two public spirited of the village's residents ~~~~ miles from the town.

The treasure is supposed to have belonged to a Roman matron who buried it at the approach of Hannibal's troops in 216 B. C., but there is nothing to explain why so many centuries were allowed to elapse between the concealment of the treasure and the preparation of the parchment.

LINK TO PREHISTORIC TIMES

Discovery Made in South America Strengthens Theory Long Held Concerning Ancient Land Bridge.

A report has been published by the Field Museum of Natural History, at Chicago, describing an animal discovered in South America, which is a survivor of a prehistoric period. This animal known as Cenolestes, is small and looks like a sharp-nosed rat, but is different from any other living animal. Its bones and teeth are essentially the same as those of a group of animals now extinct and known only through fossils hundreds of thousands of years old. It has a pouch like the kangaroo, and its existence may indicate some truth in the theory that South America and Australia were connected by land in prehistoric times, since pouched animals exist in both places. The original stock may have spread from South America to Australia, or vice versa, or it may have originated in a long-vanished continent, the so-called Antarctica, and spread north to both continents, over a land bridge, which is supposed to have linked the three.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

No More "Shrimp Dances."

Owing to new machinery the "shrimp dance" that for years has marked the work on the shrimp-drying platform along the Louisiana coast, this year goes into limbo.

Machinery will "chuck" the sun-dried shrimps.

Boiled in salt water in great copper vats, dried in the sunshine to rubery resiliency, the shrimp were swept up into huge circles in past year. Then, to the sound of guitar, banjo or accordion, the husky platform workers, hands on hips, shuffled over the piles of shrimp. Beneath their tread the brittle shells crackled.

After the dance the pinkish shrimp meat was shoveled on great screens, the brittle shell fragments falling through, while the piles of dried flesh were packed in barrels.

The shrimp industry in Louisiana has grown to great proportions. During 1920, 20,716 persons were supported by the industry, more than $1,000,000 was invested in the fleets, and the catch was listed by the government at 28,950,000 pounds.

Makes His Bride's Trousseau.

Captain Molyneux, the gallant society dressmaker, is preparing, oh! the dearest trousseau of twenty gowns for his pretty little bob-haired bride-to-be, Muriel Dunsmuire, daughter of the ex-governor of British Columbia, and all designed and executed by his own hands in his own smart shop, says a recent Paris dispatch.

The captain was an army officer in the war and was cited for gallantry in action. Since the peace was signed he has become one of the most original dress designers in Paris, with a large and exclusive clientele.

His Inspiration.

Mrs. Alice Allan Arnold, the moving picture censor of Denver, said in a lecture: "But the worst films of all, to my mind, are those that take religious subjects and turn them into sensational licentious entertainments. I once saw the 'Temptation of St. Anthony' filmed in this way. An elderly millionaire viveur, having seen it too, said afterward at the club: 'A great film, that. I realized as it unrolled before me that for the first time in my life, by George, I wished I was a saint.'"—From the Argonaut.

Chile May Soon Export Coal.

The coal mines in Chile have recently witnessed a great development, and at present are producing about 2,000,000 tons per annum. The old mines produced a rather inferior product, but the new developments are turning out very acceptable coal, and there is plenty of room for extending operations in that country. Virtually all of the coal mined in the country is being used by the manufacturing interests there, but there is no doubt that if the development continues at the present rate there will be enough produced not only to care for the home market, but to allow enough for exportation.

ANATOLIA A LAND OF PLENTY

Food in the Greatest Abundance, but Woeful Scarcity of Water, Is the Situation There.

Americans who find life expensive would secure unbounded relief if they could go to Anatolia, in Asia Minor.

In the area through which the Greek army passed in its advance on Angora, lambs sell for 60 cents each, chickens for 12 cents, whole cows for $9 and eggs for half a cent. Everywhere food is found in great abundance and at prices such as America never heard of even before the war.

The fertile fields of Anatolia rival those of the most productive American state. Wheat is the principal commodity of the thrifty Turkish and Kurd farmers. They raise sufficient quantities to feed a continent. When King Constantine's army made its advance into the heart of the Kemalist country it found hundreds of thousands of tons of wheat and grain.

The Greeks also found incalculable numbers of cattle and sheep. Cows, oxen and water buffalo swarm the plains of Asia Minor, while the famous Angora goats and Caraman sheep are so numerous that they sell for about the price of a pound of mutton in any American city.

It is this great cornucopia that has made it possible for Mustapha Kemal's army to subsist so long without outside assistance. It is also this great abundance that has kept the Greek forces going. Their onward march to Angora would not have been possible upon the meager food supplies they have been able to transport from Smyrna and Greece.

The only thing scarce in Anatolia, particularly in the southern part, is water. The territory over which the Greek troops marched is made up largely of desert land and barren hills, with water only at distant intervals. For days the weary soldiers had to march under the burning Asia sun without a drop of water.

Soundproof Bricks Float.

Bricks that float are made from an earth found in Denmark, which is impregnated with the fossilized remains of diatoms, a very minute form of life.

Brought to Colchester, England, the earth is baked into bricks, which are said to be fireproof and soundproof.

Another novelty is the Frewen cavity brick, 1,800 of which take the place of 20,000 ordinary bricks. The hollow spaces in these bricks are linked in every direction, thus providing constant circulation of air through the walls of the house.

ANCIENT CITY HAD BAR ROOMS

Discoveries in Pompeii Prove That the Serving of Drinks Was a Recognized Occupation.

Three score years after the birth of Christ the busy and beautiful little city of Pompeii, overlooking the Bay of Naples, with its 20,000 inhabitants, was dramatically blotted out of existence by an eruption of the long-dormant Vesuvius, and for 17 centuries lay unknown beneath a thick shroud of volcanic refuse, remarks the Toronto Mail and Empire. About the middle of the Eighteenth century the grave of the dead city was accidentally discovered and subsequent excavations have slowly revealed the rare treasures of a departed civilization. New excavations were begun in 1911, but with the great war of 1914 the world had something more important to think about than Pompeii. Nevertheless, the antiquarians continued quietly digging and discovering fresh wonders. A few weeks ago the London Times correspondent in Rome wrote an interesting description of the latest findings, among them being a great fresco, with painting of the 12 penates (custodians) of the city,—Jupiter, Juno, Mars, Minerva, Hercules, Venus, Mercury, Proserpine, Vulcan, Ceres, Apollo and Diana.

But to the people of North America the most absorbing discovery will be that of a bar, or thermopolium, where drinks were served out to parched Pompeiians. There were many terra cotta amphorae found—and an amphora, gentle reader, is a sort of glorified "schooner." At the end of the bar was a small furnace and a caldron with a lid for mixing what Mr. Dooley termed "hot wans." Within the caldron the excavators found the remains of some of the liquid used.

WORLD'S DEBT TO COLUMBUS

Expansion of Europe and Remaking of the Earth Followed Explorer's Wonderful Voyage.

Few people realize how thinly great regions were peopled four centuries ago, or how many Europeans are living outside of Europe today. The United States, Canada and Argentina contain twice as much land as the home continent. When white settlement began, the land now comprised in the United States may have contained 400,000 Indians—that is the highest estimate. Possibly the other two countries contained as many, an average of population of one person to nine square miles. Australia, with 3,000,000 square miles, held not more than 100,000 persons.

Today, those four countries support a white population of about 125,000,000. The hot regions between the Rio Grande and La Plata hold several millions more. Europe has spread over half the globe, while Asia has shrunk well within her own borders—and all this change dates from and depends upon that voyage of Columbus.

White men crossed the Atlantic before Columbus, but they left no trace of their voyage on this side. It is passing strange that not even European domestic animals were left here—the Norsemen had cattle, whose bellowing frightened the natives. Not till Columbus pointed the way did the expansion of Europe begin, or the world become truly one world instead of many.

Effective Fog Signals.

In a heavy fog there is danger of collision between ships because the uniform signals used merely indicate their presence, and tell nothing of their course or direction. A sea captain of long experience has now devised a system which overcomes this difficulty, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. Four signal horns of different tones are used, two sirens, a shrill whistle, and a steam gong, all of which are operated by foot levers. Each of these corresponds to one quadrant of the compass, and is operated only when the ship's course lies in that general direction. The four divisions of the quadrant itself are indicated by varying the signals, as, for example, one long blast, a long and short, a long and two short, and two long. A recording mechanism is connected to the signal equipment and serves as evidence in case of subsequent question as to the handling of the ship.

Old Regiment to Be Disbanded.

The Eightieth Carnatics is one of the pre-war units which has been ordered to disband. The regiment was raised at Tanjore in 1777; for the first 40 years of its career it was almost continuous in active service, and among the trophies in the officers' mess is the black marble cup belonging to Tippu, the sultan, from whose palace the Carnatics took the cup at the storming of Serpingapatam, in 1799. The cup is being offered by the regiment to the British museum.

In the years before the war the Carnatics were famous for their shooting record.—London Mail.

FARM MANAGEMENT SCHOOL

Schools Will Be Held In Thief River Falls And Goodridge

A farm management school will be held in Thief River Falls on Friday, January 13th and in Goodridge Saturday, January 14th. Mr. W. L. Cavet of the University Farm and O. M. Olson of Moorhead, Minnesota, will be the principal speakers. Othes will be secured before that time. The meetings will be held at 10 a. m. and 1:30 p. m. closing at 4:30 p. m. in order to give farmers a chance to get home early. The meetings will be held in the Farm Bureau office at Thief River Falls and in the school house at Goodridge.

A meeting of the dairymen interested in organizing a milk testing association will be held at the same time. The purpose of this meeting will be to determine whether a successful testing association can be formed in Pennington County and the employment of a man to have charge of the work. Every farmer in the county should plan to take in these meetings as they concern the vital elements of good farming of to-day.

This section was treated to a real old time blizzard last Friday. Not a great deal of snow fell but it was light and drifted badly.

TAXES ARE REPEALED

With the beginning of this year a number of so-called nuisance and luxury taxes are repealed. Taxes on passenger tickets, clothing, shoes, ice cream, patent medicines, cosmetics, sporting goods and on freight shipments are included in the list. Existing taxes on tobacco, cigars, cigarettes, autos and auto parts, jewelry, estate, telephone, admissions and dues, photo films and supplies, are retained, as well as stamp taxes on negotiable paper and holdings.

NEW PEACE DOLLAR COINED

A new silver dollar will soon be in circulation. The new coin, known as the peace dollar, has the head of Libراty on one side and on the other a dove upon a mountain top clutching an olive branch with the word "Peace" below it. This will be the first change made in design of the dollar coin since back in 1878. About a half million of the coins will bear the 1921 date.

Anna's Merciless Critic

By CORONE REMINGTON

(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

It was not surprising that Anna Terhune should try writing for the movies. Everybody but the entirely illiterate and the abjectly lazy has tried it, is trying it or is going to try it tomorrow. Most folks experiment in film fiction because they fancy themselves a bit clever.

Anna, however, was prompted to that endeavor only because she was sure she was a little less stupid and a good deal less badly educated than Hazel Hazelhurst; and Hazel, so all Hillsburg was one morning informed by the Herald, had written and sold to the Imperial Films company a scenario called "Flaming Swords and Bleeding Hearts." Afterward Anna had seen the film herself, with the subtitle, "Story by Hazel Hazelhurst," as big as life.

It was an amazing thing to Anna, because Hazel, a spinner girl in the silk mill where Anna was a stenographer, had left school of her own volition at thirteen and was the kind of girl who talks slang exclusively, chews gum on the streets and goes to 10-cent dances.

If it were really true that inarticulate people like that could get hundreds and hundreds of dollars for just tacking together a few ideas and sending them to a film company, then Anna felt she was doing herself an absolute injustice by not trying her hand at this fairy game of chance. She would do it.

Wherefore, within the next six weeks, Anna by dint of much mental toil evolved three stories. Each was neatly typed and dispatched to the Colossal Photoplays company, at New York. And each, about a week after its departure, came back as unerringly as a homing pigeon. With each was enclosed the same printed form, stating that the Colossal company "regrets that the material submitted is not exactly suited to its present needs."

It was just at this time that the National Fabrics company decided to close down its Hillsburg plant for two weeks for "readjustment purposes." Anna, receiving assurance from the manager that she would not be affected by the readjustment proceedings, found herself with a fortnight's vacation on her hands.

She determined that the way to discover something about this scenario game, meantime, was to go to the place where it is played. So she made the first trip of her life to the metropolis, procured as comfortable a furnished room as New York's fantastic prices made possible to her limited purse, and set out next day to "learn the game."

Anna expected to get speech with a couple of scenario editors, at least, and to obtain from them some words of advice and suggestion; also, probably, to secure permission to visit a studio or two and witness screen drama in the making. She went to the Colossal's establishment first.

From a red-headed typist at the portal of the scenario department Anna received disillusionment. The scenario editor wasn't to be seen. Nobody was to be seen, except by appointment. A million people a day wanted to see somebody about scenarios. Anyhow, Mr. Highland was out. The associate editor was out, too.

Anna was on the point of beating a discomfited retreat when Ted Maltby, under inspiration to have an early lunch, emerged from an inner room. Ted, one of the Colossal's keenest scenario readers, nevertheless was a departmental joke for his softness of heart toward the genus "writing nut." He stopped, looking inquiringly at the red-headed girl and toward Anna.

"'S lady wantsta see somebody 'bout script writin'," volunteered Red Head, vastly bored.

"Perhaps I can be of service," offered Tom. The proffer was made in sacrificial kindness, but as Anna Terhune's face lighted in acknowledgment Ted whistled, mentally, in delighted surprise. "A regular girl!" he inwardly congratulated himself—"after, oh, Lord, these many hundreds!" Then, to Anna, "I am one of the readers—Maltby."

Anna told him her name. "Of Hillsburg?" Ted asked. "I have read several of your scripts lately."

"Oh, I'm so glad!" exclaimed the girl. "Then you will be the very person to advise me. That's what I have come for, you know."

Maltby experienced the sudden sense of depression that comes to him who is unexpectedly called on to break the news to the family of the victim. "I shall be delighted," he managed to say, however. "I was just going over to Forty-fourth street for much coffee and little food. Would you care to come? It's a wonderful place to talk."

New York is not Hillsburg, even on one's first day. Anna, quite to her own astonishment, accepted the invitation with no more ceremony than had accompanied its extension. Ten minutes later they were sitting, in the camaraderie of old acquaintanceship, at a little undraped table in the presence of a negligible luncheon and miraculous [illegible] brew.

"Now," said Ted, "I'm going to play the heavy—just [illegible] plain brute. You've come to New York to [illegible] [illegible]

"Why, yes. And I'm glad you——"

"Wait," interrupted Ted. "You're not going to thank me; in a minute you're going to throw that coffee cup at my head, Miss Terhune"—Maltby's expression showed that he hated the task ahead of him—"I ask you to believe that I am animated by the sincerest, if quite sudden, friendship. There is only one thing for you to do about this work."

"I think I know what you are going to say," Anna interjected. "You're going to tell me I must start all over—begin at a beginning, somewhere—and learn the craft, just as any other must be learned."

"Wrong. Quite wrong. The only thing for you to do is to drop it. Quit it. Forget it. You'd never make a screen writer in a thousand years. There! I've said it—and mighty hard it was to say. I've read all the stories you've sent in. There's nothing the matter with them—except that they are hopeless. You're not a writer—I think you're a doer. You're not an imaginer of make-believe romances. If you'll pardon me, I think you're a million times more surely intended to live a real one. I don't believe you ever had any actual conviction that you could write—I can tell that from your stuff. I wish you would tell me just how you came to undertake it."

So kindly, so admiring, so ardently friendly and concerned were the big brown eyes of her merciless critic that Anna could feel no resentment. The only surprise she experienced was in not being surprised at all. And she told him, plump, about the Hazel Hazelhurst episode.

"My better judgment tells me you are wholly right, Mr. Maltby," she went on. "And yet how do you explain the success of that illiterate girl? If it were not for that one thing I could laugh at the whole idea—and devote the rest of my vacation to 'seeing New York' and having a good, wholesome time."

At the mention of the name Hazelhurst, Maltby had started imperceptibly. Now he looked at his companion for half a dozen long seconds before he answered. "I hate to spoil your Hillsburg celebrity's small glory," he said at length, "but in the person before you see the original and only Hazelhurst, author of 'Flaming Swords.' I alone am guilty of that atrocity—and my only excuse is that I needed the money. And you, Miss Terhune, aside from the lunatic who bought and produced it, alone know the shameful truth."

"Good gracious!" exclaimed Anna, "do you mean that that girl at home merely lied—claimed the picture when she saw the name in a movie magazine or somewhere?"

"Your imagination improves, Miss Terhune," grinned Ted.

"Do you know how I feel?" demanded Anna suddenly. "Well, I feel as though some one had lifted a ton weight off my shoulders. I'm going straight home and tear up those foolish manuscripts and give three cheers and go to a perfectly good show!"

"Why not make it the shops this afternoon and the show tonight?" supplemented Ted eagerly. "I—I'd mighty well like to take you."

As they parted at the Broadway corner it wasn't disappointment that went along with Anna — disappointment doesn't sing in your heart. And Ted Maltby, looking after her, said to himself: "Two weeks. Well, many a pippin of a story has been built in less than that."

Shepherd's Excuse.

Although shepherds have always been held to be poetical and reasonably righteous persons, they never have much opportunity to go to church and so when a shepherd in Sussex, Eng., dies, a lock of wool is put into the coffin, so that when their record is looked up on the judgment day they may present this supreme excuse, writes a correspondent. Sussex is rich in quaint superstitions. If there are any "wild feathers"—feathers from game birds—in a pillow one cannot "die easy" on it, but lingers on in pain. It is unlucky to sell bees, but if a price be paid it must be in gold or hay. When the head of the house dies the bees are "told" and a piece of crape hung on the hive.—Montreal Family Herald.

Seventy Pounds of Meteor a Minute.

Our planet is getting heavier and heavier! How does that happen? Because of the meteors that are constantly falling on it. You may not have seen any of them fall, but the earth is a large place. In a year eleven thousand four hundred and thirty-five tons of meteors fall! This gives an average of seventy pounds per minute.

Much of this tonnage comes in the form of fine meteoric dust that settles all over the earth. However, a large meteor—too big to burn on entering our atmosphere—falls occasionally. Several years ago one of them fell in Iowa and exploded on hitting the earth. Over five thousand pieces were picked up and some weighed over four hundred pounds.—Popular Science Monthly.

Limited Time.

Don't ever get the idea that Catalina island is a slow place. Had you been close to the rock where Big Ben hangs out, on a certain recent Sunday evening you would have overheard the following:

HINDU WOMEN AWAKING.

The feminist movement among the Hindus is less organized and less advanced than in any other country, but there are many evidences that it is progressing rapidly. Many influential Hindus and Mohammedans have taken up the cause and are making it a part of their program of national liberties. The men who went into the war saw women moving about freely in France, and when they returned they brought back new ideas. The women during their absence had answered the call to arms—they had entered the workshops and hospitals. The war thus enlarged their outlook on life.

Height of Aurora Borealis.

A Norwegian scientist, M. Stormer, was able to have photographed at several points in his country, the aurora borealis seen last May, which upset telegraph lines and cables and provided a gorgeous display in many parts of the world.

Comparing these photographs in relation to known stars photographed at the same time, he has calculated the height at which this aurora borealis was spread forth—namely, 312½ miles.

Thus, since the aurora borealis is by proof an electrical illumination of the rarified air gases, the earth's atmosphere extends at least that distance above the earth's surface.—Detroit News.

South America Opening Coal Mines.

Fear that the coal deposits of the United States would become exhausted has led to the development of coal mining interests in South America. Whereas formerly Chile was about the only coal-producing country in South America, coal development is now being carried on extensively in many countries from Colombia to Patagonia.

MEXICO HAS LARGEST TREE

Giant Ahueheute Is in Oaxaca, and Is to Be Made Center of Great State Park.

The Santa Maria de Tula, a giant ahueheute tree in Oaxaca, Mex., is the largest tree on the American continent. In view of this Oaxaca authorities plan to create a state park with the giant as the central point of interest.

The tree measures, some 12 feet from the ground, 80 feet in diameter and over 250 feet in circumference. That is larger than the largest of the famous California redwood trees.

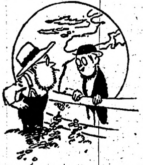
The giant belongs to the Mexican cypress family, and its name, ahuehuete, in Aztec, means "old water tree." The Aztecs and most of the other Indian races of Mexico had a profound respect for old things. The giant cypress did not escape their attention, and they discovered that wherever an ahuehuete grew there was water not far from the surface.

Connected with this is the curious belief that if you place your ear to the roots of the Santa Maria de Tula, you will hear distinctly the murmuring of the subterranean waters.

The "old water tree" in an age of nature worship was dedicated to one of the oldest of the Aztec deities, the goddess of the waters, who was believed to inhabit, at times, the underground waters, from which she came, occasionally in the form of a beautiful woman.

After the conquest of the Aztec empire, the Indians continued to worship the old water tree. But after this practice was broken up by the adoption of Christianity, they began to call the big tree Santa Maria (after the Virgin Mary).

PERISH THE THOUGHT!



The Poultryman—Queer those eggs I sold you didn't hatch. Are you sure the hens were on them steady?

Mr. Blulex—They were on the eggs day and night, excepting Sundays, of course. I won't permit even my hens to break the Sabbath.

CLOCK FOR AIRCRAFT.

The air service of the War department has developed a new and peculiar kind of clock, to be carried on airplanes. It is "built like a watch," having a watch movement, and is wound by electricity, being connected with a small storage battery.

Hitherto it has been found difficult to get a clock to do satisfactory work on a plane. The vibration made the timepiece unreliable, and its accuracy was further affected by changes of temperature with altitude.

The new clock, thanks to certain "compensation" arrangements, keeps good time at any temperature from 90 below zero to 150 above, and vibration does not bother it. Tests made by the bureau of standards have given it a full indorsement.—Philadelphia Ledger.

YESTERDAY AND TODAY.

An exchange uses an art lay-out to depict the difference between the old dances and the new. In the "Virginia reel" a couple is shown holding aloof, almost as far apart as two stops on the "Limited" and the tips of their fingers barely touch in a sort of icy "Pleased-to-meet-you" pose, but in the photo of the down-to-the-minute, hug-me-tighter, cheek-to-cheek affair they look as if one of them was going away and they never expected to see each other again. But you won't forget to write, will ya?

VIA THE PINK ONE

By HESTER CALDERWOOD.

©, 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

Everyone he had met that day on his way to the office had said: "Good morning, Mr. Gilford; fine morning, isn't it?" And Larry Gilford had gazed into the sky and had seen that it was blue and cloudless and that the sun was shining, and had suddenly discovered that it was a fine day—outside. But when he opened the door of his business-looking office, everything was dingy and lonely—like his own thoughts.

Perhaps Erma Clark was to blame, perhaps she wasn't. Anyway, he had accompanied her to one of the usual twice-a-week theater trips that night, but he had not accompanied her home. She left him at the theater door and told him, very decidedly, that she preferred to go home alone.

So Larry plodded back to his two uninviting, rented rooms with a downcast heart and Erma's fiery words still ringing in his ears—words to the effect that he had become so engrossed in his business of late that he had neglected her to the point of rudeness.

A wonderful frame of mind to be in at the start of a long office day! Larry's head felt heavy and stupid and dull, too.

And the work that was before him! His desk was fairly swamped with letters. And right on top of the pile was a pink envelope, addressed in a feminine hand.

Larry gave a disgusted groan and threw the letter on the floor.

The door opened. Larry wheeled around in his chair and saw a tall, slender girl enter the room. She was dressed in soft, dark brown. But the chic French veil she wore was of such a dark, dense shade that it completely hid her features from him.

"Hello!" the person said. "Alone? Isn't that nice!"

Larry stared at her a moment, then, remembering that he hadn't risen to his feet, hastily did so and stood before her awkwardly silent.

Larry hadn't long to wonder, for the girl was already loosening the veil from her face, and then—

"Erma!" he cried joyously, springing toward her, "Erma—dear."

"I couldn't stay away any longer, Larry," she whispered softly, coming closer to him.

"But you said—".

The girl pressed a small hand over his mouth. "I know I said a lot of things, Larry dear, and I've come to be forgiven for them; the things I said about you being selfish and ugly, I mean."

"But I'm afraid I did neglect you, Erma. I didn't think—I had more business than I could attend to last week, and it simply wouldn't let me think of anybody or anything else."

"Larry, you didn't neglect me; you've been wonderful to me—always. I needed this lesson—the thought that perhaps you wouldn't forgive me—to make me understand."

Larry didn't answer. He only stood silently before her, too happy, too bewildered to speak.

"Dear," she was saying in her soft, low voice, "I know how to appreciate you now. I couldn't get along without you. I love you, Larry! I love you. Please, please, forgive me."

Then it was that Larry spoke. "Dearest," he cried hoarsely, "stay with me always; promise me. I love you, Erma dear, I love—"

His last words were lost as he gathered her close in his arms and smothered his face in her hair, his whole heart filled with a new, warm joy of having her back again. For several moments they remained thus, until the sharp striking of the office clock awoke Larry and he lifted his head, still quite dazed, from the letter-littered desk top.

So that was all! Erma was still lost, he was still alone; it had only been a dream.

He mustn't think about it any longer, he told himself. His work must be done and he would tackle the worst part first. So thinking, he picked up the pink envelope, which had fallen at his feet, and opened it. It read:

"Dearest Larry—In half an hour I will be at your office, so have all callers out by then. I'm coming to be forgiven for the horrid things I said to you, Larry dear. I've missed you terribly since last night and I'm in such a hurry to see you that I can't stop to write any more.

"Lots of love,

"ERMA."

Erma had been lost and now she was found again. And happiness had come to Larry by the way of the pink letter.

87-Year-Old Plant.

After lying in a warehouse in the Minories since 1834, a case of dried flora from the Azoras has at last found a home in Kew gardens, to which it has been presented by the Royal Botanic society.

The circumstances of the case are remarkable. Last year a firm in the Minorics, Messrs. Joseph Barber, asked the Botanic society to accept a case or dried plants, which had been lying in their warehouses for many years, and to which a docket was attached giving the name of the collector, Mr. Carew Hunt (H. B. M. consul at the Azores), the name and place of finding of the plants and the date of collection—1834. The parcel was addressed to the Botanical society of London, which [illegible]

EASY ENOUGH

By JACK LAWTON.

Copyright, 1921, Western Newspaper Union.

Alice turned to her friend a tear-stained face. "I dont know what I am going to do," she bemoaned, "it is dreadful to be born with a bashful disposition. And having to be tied constantly to Aunt's old fashioned apron strings, keeps me growing more painfully bashful all the time; or maybe its embarrassment, over my own lack of confidence. Anyway I never can have a good time wherever I am, while I am bound to remain tongue tied or stutter at every effort at conversation. It was not so hard to bear before George William Prescott arrived on the scene, but he is bashfully silent too, therin lies my present difficulty."

"Who," asked Cissy abruptly, "is this George William Prescott?" Her diffident friend sighed. "He's the man in my life," she confessed.

"At least, I never took much interest in any man before. He came to Aunt Letties, one evening to pay a duty call, being the guest of her friend Mrs. Seymour. My! it was an awful evening; we just sat and stared at each other, like two people at the dentists; and when I tried to make a remark it sounded insane, and when he did, he'd get red to the ears; but he has been mixing more or less with our set ever since, because Mr. Seymour has taken him into his office and Mr. Prescott is doing so well there, that he's decided to stay on in town. But no one has been able to become very well acquainted with William, that's what Mrs. Seymour calls him, because he is so diffident." Cecelia Rose wrinkled her pretty brows.

"What I am trying to find out," she remarked "is why anyone should care to."

The wide eyes of Alice were tenderly reminiscent, "Mr. Prescott is so wonderfully good looking," she mused, "his eyes look as if they were trying to say many wonderful things that his lips cannot. While his ways—"

"Mercy," interrupted Cissy, "I do believe you are in love. That would be a serious state of affairs, especially if your George William—oh! let's call him Bill, to take the stiffness away—if your Bill were also speechlessly in love with you. Fancy two frigid glaciers, shining upon each other!" "Cissy dear," begged Alice, "you have such drawing power, couldn't you draw George William—Bill, I I mean, out of his shell, and make him approachable?"

"Approachable to you?" Cissy laughed, "Oh! I think it would be easy enough; but you must promise to take him off my hands afterward. I am too fond of being entertained myself to do all the 'drawing.'"

George William Prescott, standing aloof against the supper room curtain, looked as lonely and as uncomfortable as he felt. His stilted replies to several maidens who had ventured inviting remarks regarding the evening, or the success of Mrs. Seymour's party, were not encouraged, to further sociability. Alice, breathless, and startled-eyed, had suggested that supper would soon be served, and was allowed to drift on, to the escort of a braver and newly arrived man. George William, mentally reproached himself for leaving the assured entertainment of books for an uncertainty of enjoyment, when a laughing voice accosted him.

"I am your fate as supper companion," Cecelia informed him, "Being guest of honor, Mrs. Seymour gave me the privilege of choice, and I," Cissy Rose smiled, "I chose you." Mr. Prescott started to bow perfunctorily, then bending, drew her hand instead through his arm. Alice, at an opposite side of the flower decked table, gazed wonderingly at her admired one's evident enjoyment of the occasion. Once she heard in accompaniment to Cissy's merry glance at him, her daring use of the name, "Bill."

An eager light showed for a moment in the young man's eyes, his work was also his hobby, then from the doorway Cecelia looked back on the two, and George William turned, dazedly, to the shrinking figure at his side. But it was not of his beloved art that he spoke, "Cissy Rose," he repeated softly, "Why, you'd think the name was made for her, wouldn't you? With the rose color in her cheeks, and that sort of saucy way, she has—."

It was a long speech for William, which may have been accountable for the long silence that followed. From this silence Alice was only rescued by her former supper escort. "Hello," cried that young man breezily, "been looking for you everywhere. I want you to play a certain song for us. Oh! yes you will," he waved her shy objections aside, "I will sit on the bench beside you and give my moral support."

Cissy was in despair. Also, she began to realize certain alarming symptoms of timidity upon her own part at the approach of Bill Prescott.

"I love you!" declared the man whose timidity Alice had deplored.

"You love me, Cissy Rose, and we are going to be married." "Mercy!" gasped Cissy, her trembling fingers were promptly imprisoned in a masterful grasp.

"I have been trying to draw you out for Alice's sake," she confusedly explained. "Oh! that's all right," George William happily replied. "Alice doesn't need your help [illegible] admirable [illegible]

EVERY BOOK EVER WRITTEN

Index Undertaken by Brussels Library Has Been Found Too Great a Task.

The International Institute of Bibliography, which is housed in the Palais Mondial at Brussels, was adversely criticized at the meeting of the British Library association at Manchester.

The institute aims to provide a complete classification index of all the books that were ever written. Since there are at present but 12,000,000 cards, it is apparent that the institute is at present far from achieving its ambitious purpose.

The cards are stored in four ranks of card cabinets, running from end to end of a room 80 feet long. They are classified according to the Dewey system, somewhat elaborated, and index both author and subject, so that far less than 12,000,000 books are represented by the cards themselves.

A Manchester librarian criticizes the institute as being too ambitious to succeed, and suggests that, if it is to be genuinely useful, it ought to be supported by all the nations rather than by the Belgian government alone, as at present. If there is to be any international bibliographical institution of the kind, he favors locating it at Washington, "because the Americans are a great nation of bibliographers."—Living Age.

MILLIONS OF 'EM.

A new record for shipments of watermelons was established this year, according to figures announced by the bureau of markets of the United States Department of Agriculture. Shipments exceeded 44,000 cars, surpassing last year's record by 5,000 cars.

From the Florida-Georgia-South Carolina melon section shipments amounted to 25,000 cars. Three other states, Texas, California and Missouri, shipped 3,000 to 5,000 cars each; Alabama and North Carolina shipped more than 1,000 each; Arkansas, Indiana, Oklahoma, 400 to 700 each; and 14 other states in smaller amounts.

In the last three years there has been a notable increase in melon production. Nearly 30,000 acres were planted in Texas, compared with 38,000 in Georgia, the leading state, but shipments from Texas were greatly reduced by unfavorable weather. In most other sections conditions were favorable. Taking the watermelon sections as a whole, there was a greater production from an acreage about equal to that of 1920.

BETTER COUNTY ROADS POSSIBLE

Commissioner Babcock Has Plan To Provide Good Country Roads.

Pennington county, with other counties in the state, can secure a complete system of good local roads in the shortest time and with least expenses by adopting a definite program of systematic improvement; pooling its road and bridge funds with those of the townships, and applying modren roadbuilding methods.

Chas Babcock, state highway commissioner, made this statement this week, and recommended calling an early convention in each county seat or centrally located town in the county, at which the county commissioners and the supervisors from every township could meet with the county highway engineer to work out a systematic plan of county good road development. By ending patchwork, he added, the proposed plan will produce greatest results possible from money used.

Last year Pennington County had more than $75,000.00 for use in constructing roads other than trunk lines Minnesota county and township funds for road purposes are more than twice as large as the trunk highway total so local road improvements should easily keep pace with these on the trunk routes.

Declamatory Contest

Plans are being perfected for a declamatory contest to be held here Friday January 20th, in which pupils of the local high will compete. Oritorical and dramatic selections will be given by the boys and girls for local prizes. Winners in this contest will compete at the district competition to be held at Thief River a week later, the winners of which will be chosen to represent the district in a state contest to be held at St. Paul.

Miss Blanche Hoff and Mildred Fellman left Friday for Minneapolis, Miss Fellman to enter the McPhail School of Music at that place, and Miss Hoff to spend a few days at the Dr. Swanson home before leaving for her school work at Litchfield.

A daughter was born to Mr. and Mrs. Ole Hegglund on Saturday Jan. 7th.

County Printing Let

At meeting of the county board held January 3dr., the Times at Thief River received the official designation as official county paper. The annual Statement, Delinquent Tax List, and Personal Proprety Tax List will, however, be distributed by all papers in the county including the Spectator.

McKerrow Is Dead

W. A. McKerrow, manager of the co-operative livestock marketing association agency at So. St. Paul, and who for a number of years has been connected with the agricultural department of the state university, died last week at St. Paul after a brief illness. Mr. McKerrow was a factor in forming co-operative enterprises of various kinds, and his services were in great demand in all parts of the state. He was at Thief River a short time ago, and at that time appeared to be in perfect health, so news of his death was a surprise to his many friends throuout the state.

Minnesota loses an able and very efficient man by the death of Mr. Kerrow.

Dies At Seattle

Gustaf Englund, a poineer resident of this community until his removal to the Pacific Coast a number of years ago, passed away recently at Seattle, Wash., according to a letter received here by Fred Soderberg. It appears the old gentleman contracted a cold which developed into pneumonia which proved fatal within a very short time.

Proposes New Highway

Senator Fred Bessette of Orr, Minn., is sponsor of a plan to build a new highway from Cook, down in the range country, west thru the Bear river and Big Fork districts to strike Northome thence west on the south side of the Red Lake to connect with either the state road north of this place, or some other suitable route, and connect with the Jefferson Highway. The Cook Journal is boosting the project which it has named the "Steel-to-Wheat Highway". Such a highway would provide the people up this way with a very short route to the Range, the lake disticts and Duluth. There is much merit in the proposition and it should be given strong backing from Northwestern Minnesota.

Ira Richardson Dies

Early last Sunday morning at Thief River Falls occured the death of Attorney Ira Richardson, one of the best known pioneers in this part of the state. Death was the result of a paralytic stroke which occured a short time ago. During his thirty years of residence in Thief River, Mr. Richardson has held a number of public offices the last being that of Judge of Probate from which he retired a year ago owing to ill health.

A public spirited citizen in every sense of the word, he was known and respected thruout this section of the state and his passing will be noted with regret. The remains were shipped to his former home at Elgin, Minn., for interment.

M. HAMMAR MEETS TRAGIC DEATH

Found Frozen To Death Near Homestead South Of Willliams.

The following clipping from the Warroad Pioneer chronicles the tragic passing of a former resident of St. Hilaire who was well known locally especially among the older residents. Manne Hammar resided with his parents on a farm near this place until the death of his father when he and his mother made their home in the village. Mr. Hammar engaged in various enterprises here until his removal to Thief River. His mother died a few years ago at Thief River, and since then Mr. Hammar has been at Warroad and Baudette.

M. Hammar, who has a homestead about 17 miles south of Williams, was found frozen to death some 20 rods from his shack, last Monday afternoon. It appears that he started out with his gun Friday afternoon and lost his way. Foot tracks showed that he had circled around within a space of two acres for several hours before becoming exhausted and laid down. The remains were taken to Baudette Monday night, where they were prepared for burial. Interment will be held at Thief River Falls where his parents are buried. Mr. Hammar was a single man and 45 years of age. He was well known here, having been employed at the Blevins meat market some time ago.—Warroad Pioneer.

Surprise Party

Mrs Carrie Berglund was tendered a surprise party at her home last Saturday evening, the occasion being her 74th birthday anniversary. After first novelty of the surprise had worn off, "Aunt" Carrie rose to the occasion in a manner that would do credit to a much younger person, and showed her surprisers a real enjoyable time. Before leaving, the guests presented her a suitable and appropriate reminder of the happy occasion. Those present were: Mesdames Aug. Svenson, L. A. Carlson, J. Roy, Thos. H. Hovet, J. Kinney, D. Patterson, O. Gunstad and "Grandma" Peterson.

Pete Simonson is enjoying a vacation from his duties in the Odegaard store at Hazel and is visiting with the Ittner and Potvin families at Cass Lake.

EASY ENOUGH

By JACK LAWTON.

Copyright, 1921, Western Newspaper Union.

Alice turned to her friend a tear-stained face. "I dont know what I am going to do," she bemoaned, "it is dreadful to be born with a bashful disposition. And having to be tied constantly to Aunt's old fashioned apron strings, keeps me growing more painfully bashful all the time; or maybe its embarrassment over my own lack of confidence. Anyway I never can have a good time wherever I am, while I am bound to remain tongue tied or stutter at every effort at conversation. It was not so hard to bear before George William Prescott arrived on the scene, but he is bashfully silent too, therin lies my present difficulty."

"Who," asked Cissy abruptly, "is this George William Prescott?" Her diffident friend sighed. "He's the man in my life," she confessed.

"At least, I never took much interest in any man before. He came to Aunt Letties, one evening to pay a duty call, being the guest of her friend Mrs. Seymour. My! it was an awful evening. we just sat and stared at each other, like two people at the dentists; and when I tried to make a remark it sounded insane, and when he did, he'd get red to the ears; but he has been mixing more or less with our set ever since, because Mr. Seymour has taken him into his office and Mr. Prescott is doing so well there, that he's decided to stay on in town. But no one has been able to become very well acquainted with William, that's what Mrs. Seymour calls him, because he is so diffident." Cecelia Rose wrinkled her pretty brows.

"What I am trying to find out," she remarked "is why anyone should care to."

The wide eyes of Alice were tenderly reminiscent, "Mr. Prescott is so wonderfully good looking," she mused, "his eyes look as if they were trying to say many wonderful things that his lips cannot. While his ways—"

"Mercy," interrupted Cissy, "I do believe you are in love. That would be a serious state of affairs, especially if your George William—oh! let's call him Bill, to take the stiffness away—if your Bill were also speechlessly in love with you. Fancy two frigid glaciers, shining upon each other!" "Cissy dear," begged Alice. "you have such drawing power, couldn't you draw George William—Bill, I mean, out of his shell, and make him approachable?"

"Approachable to you?" Cissy laughed, "Oh! I think it would be easy enough; but you must promise to take him off my hands afterward. I am too fond of being entertained myself to do all the 'drawing.'"

George William Prescott, standing aloof against the supper room curtain, looked as lonely and as uncomfortable as he felt. His stilted replies to several maidens who had ventured inviting remarks regarding the evening, or the success of Mrs. Seymour's party, were not encouraged to further sociability. Alice, breathless, and startled-eyed, had suggested that supper would soon be served, and was allowed to drift on, to the escort of a braver and newly arrived man. George William, mentally reproached himself for leaving the assured entertainment of books for an uncertainty of enjoyment, when a laughing voice accosted him.

"I am your fate as supper companion," Cecelia informed him, "Being guest of honor, Mrs. Seymour gave me the privilege of choice, and I," Cissy Rose smiled, "I chose you." Mr. Prescott started to bow perfunctorily, then bending, drew her hand instead through his arm. Alice, at an opposite side of the flower decked table, gazed wonderingly at her admired one's evident enjoyment of the occasion. Once she heard in accompaniment to Cissy's merry glance at him, her daring use of the name, "Bill."

An eager light showed for a moment in the young man's eyes, his work was also his hobby, then from the doorway Cecelia looked back on the two, and George William turned, dazedly, to the shrinking figure at his side. But it was not of his beloved art that he spoke, "Cissy Rose," he repeated softly, "Why, you'd think the name was made for her, wouldn't you? With the rose color in her cheeks, and that sort of saucy way, she has—."

It was a long speech for William, which may have been accountable for the long silence that followed. From this silence Alice was only rescued by her former supper escort. "Hello," cried that young man breezily, "been looking for you everywhere. I want you to play a certain song for us. Oh! yes you will," he waved her shy objections aside, "I will sit on the bench beside you and give my moral support."

Cissy was in despair. Also, she began to realise certain alarming symptoms of timidity upon her own part at the approach of Bill Prescott.

"I love you!" declared the man whose timidity Alice had deplored.

"You love me, Cissy Rose, and we are going to be married." "Mercy!" gasped Cissy, her trembling fingers were promptly imprisoned in a masterful grasp.

"I have been trying to draw you out for Alice's sake," She confusedly explained. "Oh! that's all right," George William happily replied. "Alice does not need your help, that admirable new acquaintance of hers has been doing some drawing himself—he tells me that they are engaged."

Jackrabbit Something of a Puzzle.

The jackrabbit thrives in the semi-arid regions of the West, frequently found in places remote from any visible water supply and scant growth of green vegetation. But that the rabbits are fond of succulent herbs is evident by the raids they make on grain and alfalfa fields, and vegetable gardens.

LENA'S BABY

By MARY J. HITCHCOCK.

© 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

Angela put the pan of biscuits down on the table and looked out of the pantry window. At the foot of the lane Amos was talking with the rural delivery man. Angela's sigh became a sob. How much of her present unhappiness would be gossip tomorrow? A tear splashed onto the bread board —another and another. Angela put her head down on the table and cried.

Summer heat, the time when romance calls to the blood; blood heat, the period when desire sings through one's veins—Angela had known each, and now it was zero!

"It wouldn't be so hard if I had someone else to love—a baby, now—"

But the thought was fresh torture to Angela's bruised heart. Hadn't she hoped from the first that there would be children at Meadowbrook? Hopes had become prayers and heaven had been deaf! That was the added bitterness to her present grief. If Amos left her for that other woman there would be nothing but the long, lonely years! Angela knew. She had matured early, faded soon, and she had none of Lina's plump prettiness in her own lean, lank shapelessness.

And Lina Summers, who had laughed at the love of two men, was claiming Amos for her own.

"What you going to do about it, now that you know about us?" Amos had demanded. "There ain't no use our trying to go on same as if you'd never found it out. You'll have to say—"

But Angela had said nothing. Not then, nor through the long night which she had spent in the spare room. In the morning she had come to the homely tasks of every day.

And out in the lane Amos was turning toward the house—walking quickly, as he was apt to do when excited or troubled.

"Lina ain't expected to live the day out," he cried, standing white and anxious eyed in the doorway. "She went to a dance at the Corners last night and her husband was there. They say he tried to make her go home with him, but she jumped into an auto and tried to run it herself. I've got to go—"

It was dark when the sound of wheels roused Angela to activity again. All day she had seemed dead, yet conscious of the underlying throb of heart-ache—misery that had tortured and drained her of her strength. But she asked no questions as Amos stumbled across the lamp-light and called to her. "I've come over after you; I'm going right back—"

"Me! You came for me!"

"I'm banking on you standing by her. Just because she's a woman, too. Maybe she won't last till we get there, but I told her husband you'd come—"

"Her husband. Is he—?"

"Been there all day—and all worked up, now she's going so fast!"

"I'm sorry for all of you," Angela found courage, and voice in the same minute. "She's done all she can to any of us, but I can't forget—"

"Last night?" Amos interrupted. "I know—I said things—but I thought, seeing as there's a baby—"

"Baby!" Angela grew tense.

"Didn't you know? She ran away from her husband because she didn't want to be tied down to children. He was trying to make her go home with him on account of the other little girl he didn't know how to take care of himself. Seems like she didn't run away soon enough, though, and—"

But Angela was no longer listening. In a minute she was slipping into her coat, pulling on her hat.

"Hurry!" she commanded; and again as they walked through the door-yard to the waiting wagon—"Hurry!"

* * * * * * *

In the upper chamber where Lina was breathing out her life two men and a woman watched her labored gasping. Angela moved close to the tiny nub of humanity that had slipped in as Lina was called out. Amos opened the door as the doctor returned from below stairs.

The woman on the bed opened heavy lidded eyes.

"I've made a lot of trouble—for all of you—" Her gaze left the others, fastened itself on the husband who leaned over her. "I'm sorry!" With an effort she turned her head toward Angela. "If I had been like you. You're a born mother. Could you—?" The dim eyes finished the question.

"I've been promising God I'd be a good mother—if—oh, I want to be!" Angela cried.

* * * * * * *

"Queer, you ain't never said a word to me about it since Lina died," Amos said to Angela one day. "But I want you to know—I wasn't as ready to leave you as you thought. She wasn't the kind to please me for long. I don't know what got into me—"

"It had to happen." Angela was humming at the sewing machine where she was making up tiny dresses for Lina's child. "I'd been praying for years for children I wasn't never meant to get. Maybe there wasn't no other way of making it come true!"

"Making what come true?" Amos asked.

"The power and the glory," Angela answered, and would say nothing more.

John Forseen salary	15.00

On motion, meeting adjourned.

A. J. Hed, President
M. Fricker, Clerk.

The left side of your face is more symmetrical than the right, but do you know why? This is perhaps due to the fact that most persons, when children, are made to sleep on the right side, which affects the soft bones of the face. Photographers will tell you that profiles taken from the left are usually better than views from the right.

Specialize in Your Work.

To make a success of life one has to know but one thing and do it. Boys who tumble around the ball field are often called time wasters, but they sometimes become experts in the game. Children who nose around well-selected libraries have all the odds in a good start in the field of letters.

A Line Drawn.

Of all dangers to a nation, as things exist in our day, there can be no greater one than having certain portions of the people set off from the rest by a line drawn—they not privileged as others, but degraded, humiliated, made of no account.—Walt Whitman.

Battle Won India for Britain.

British rule in India dates from June 23, 1757, when Siraj-ud-Daula was absolutely defeated in the battle of Plassy. This victory gave England the provinces of Bengal and Behar, which laid the foundation of the empire.

Simple Origin of Names.

To primitive man the cow seemed to "koo"—hence the animal's name. The Greeks imitated the crow's sound with the word "korax" and from this, by way of the "corow" springs our name for the bird. The cuckoo named himself.

Knowledge Well Worth Its Cost.

Knowledge will not be acquired without pains and application. It is troublesome and deep digging for pure waters, but when once you come to the spring, they rise up and meet you.—Felton.

FEW GREAT WOMEN PAINTERS

At Least, Only Two Have Been Accorded Recognition by the British Royal Academy.

Nowadays there are many women exhibitors at the Royal academy, but in the whole of its history there have been only two women Royal academicians.

They are Mary Moser and the famous Angelica Kauffmann. Miss Moser won the honor by painting a sublime picture of a plate of gooseberries.

Her father was George Michael Moser, a famous enameler, who became the first keeper of the academy.

An amusing story is told of Angelica Kauffmann, who announced to her friends with considerable enthusiasm that she had married a Count Horn. Unhappily, it turned out that her husband was only Count Horn's servant, who had posed as his master. She managed to obtain from the pope a decree of separation.

On the death of her impostor husband she married Zucchi, the Italian painter. Zucchi decorated the Adam houses, among others those in Adelphi strand, including the house now used by the Savage club.—London Tit-Bits.

SCREENS MADE FOR PURPOSE

Their First Use Probably Was to Protect Priests From Drafts During Religious Exercises.

Of the making of many screens there is no end. They, like draperies, lamps, mirrors, candlesticks and Chinese jade, have been pressed into the cause of adding to a room the right color note in the right place.

Screens are supposed to have originated with the Chinese, who used the screen design on all their art output in the very early centuries.

The earliest use of screens was probably to protect the priests from drafts while they celebrated mass in chilly old chapels and cloisters.

France grew especially fond of the screen and many of her greatest artists wrought their art upon the screen rather than upon canvas. Watteau adorned screens with his favorite motif of lovers and love knots, and in the same era screens of colored serges were found in the homes of even the peasantry.

INCAS ASK PROTECTION.

An odd ceremony following the celebration of Peru's centenary of independence was the presentation to President Augusto B. Leguia of a memorial inscribed by the 14 living descendants of the Inca chief, Tupac Yupanqui. In a short speech in which he pleaded for the future protection of his race, the Indian, Victor Tupac Yupanqui, made the presentation to the President. The Inca, Tupac Yupanqui, ruled from 1420 to 1478, at a time when the Inca empire included most of what is now Peru, Ecuador, Bolivia and Chili.

SOUTH AFRICAN COAL OUTPUT.

The output of the coal mines of South Africa for 1920 amounted to 11,473,452 tons, valued at $21,932,133, as compared with 10,261,859 tons for 1919, valued at $16,693,852, according to Consul General A. A. Winslow, Cape Town. The larger portion of this coal was consumed in the Union, with exports amounting to about 2,000,000 tons. The balance was taken by steamships for fuel. It is estimated that South Africa could export 40,000,000 tons of coal annually if the industry was fully developed.

WHY?

Charles, age three, had not heeded his mother's advice. He was riding on the walk on his velocipede when the last infraction of rules occurred.

"Charles," said his mother, "you come right in here and go to bed now."

"Aw, heck, mother, what does a feller want to go to bed at this time of the day for?" he indignantly asked.

DIDN'T NEED 'EM.

"I left my bathing cap and stockings on the rocks to dry. Now they are gone."

"There may be mermaids about," he suggested facetiously.

"That won't explain the disappearance of the stockings."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

The Last Piece of Cake.

It is considered bad luck to take the last piece of cake or other food on the plate. This superstition may be traced as far back as the Bible, where the injunction to "leave some for manners" is found in Ecclesiasticus 31:17.

Punch Came From East Indies.

Punch, it is said, came from the East Indies, and the name is claimed to be derived from the Sanskrit word meaning "five," on account of its five ingredients—rum, tea, sugar, lemons and hot water.

WOMAN RULES OVER ASSYRIA

Lady Surma, a Mesopotamian, Head of New Nation Created as a Result of War.

Lady Surma, an English-educated Mesopotamian, has been formally declared president of the Assyrian (distinguished from Syrian by geographical and racial lines) nation, one of the new group of self-governing countries coming out of the war. The capital of the new nation is Mosul, near the walls of old Nineveh, named after the imperial husband of Semiramis. It is a British protectorate, and the new ruler will have competent guides to assist her in promoting the destinies of her ancient race.

Lady Surma is the sister of a Nestorian patriarch, Mar Simon, killed by the Kurds in Persia during the war, who was the ruler of the Assyrians and had thrown in his lot with the allies. The elder bishop was succeeded by his brother, who died, his place being taken by the son of another brother, a very young man. Lady Surma, his aunt, became the regent and eventually the president. She was educated and represented her people in London during the war, says an exchange.

No Set Time for Best Work.

Thomas Carlyle had a room built in his house in Chelsea with double walls so that he could not hear any of the noise from outside, and in this room he wrote "The French Revolution." Gautier, on the other hand, could not think well unless he was in a newspaper office where there was lots of noise and racket going on. The human brain gets accustomed each day to a certain time for action and it works better and is more active at that time than any other time in the 24 hours.

Wisdom From the Far East.

The welfare of nations and the happiness of mankind do not depend primarily on science, intelligence, glory or a government powerful abroad; they depend on labor, thrift, consideration for our neighbors and mutual helpfulness. The latter are not material objects in life, but the most important for which we can strive. Idleness, prodigality, covetousness, tyranny—these we must root out of our hearts.—Hsu Shih-Chang.

Unto the End.

"How's this?" asked the lawyer. "You've named six bankers in your will to be pallbearers. Of course, it's all right, but wouldn't you rather choose some friends with whom you are on better terms?" "No, Judge, that's all right. Those fellows have carried me for so long they might as well finish the job."—The American Legion Weekly.

Light Lost by Dirt.

The value of clean lamps and lamp fixtures is not generally appreciated, and so the dust and soil is often allowed to rest upon them undisturbed for a long time. Attention to this matter was recently shown by tests to result in an increase of one-third in the amount of illumination in a factory. After the demonstration it was decided by the owners to employ a man to give his attention to cleaning the lamps and [illegible] them when they get to the [illegible] stage. [illegible]

GOLDEN HEART

By SADIE M. STULL.

©, 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

"Nannie, child, remember the courtesy always due new neighbors—"

"Not when they are rank trespassers! Just look at your pansy-bed, Mumsy, darling—and then at our new neighbor actually petting the brute of a raider!"

Before gentle Mrs. Marcy could frame further remonstrance Nancy darted out the garden gate. "I'll teach him he cannot add insult to injury," she flung back over her shoulder.

At any other time, Nancy would have admired the new bungalow.

Now she saw only the offending canine, and the man, whose indifference to her approach added the match to her smouldering wrath.

"That beast deserves the whip instead of a caress!" she flared. "He has a whole skin this instant simply because Mumsy Darling's middle name is Forbearance. And that, mind you, after he had ruined the pride of her garden—Heartsease Corner, she delighted to call it!"

Nancy waited dramatically.

Instead of the anticipated apology came a tantalizing drawl: "Really, did Rob Roy do all that?"

Nancy caught her breath. "Oh!" "Couldn't you see him do it?"

The amused smile faded from the boyish lips. "Not very well, Miss Spitfire. I cannot see you now."

Nancy caught her breath sharply. "Oh!" she gasped in swift contrition, "how rude—how cruel you must think me!"

"Not at all"—he was smiling again. "You didn't know."

There was a moment's strained silence. Then the true Nancy, warmhearted and impulsive, advanced to the veranda steps.

"We are your nearest neighbors, Mumsy Darling, Teddy Boy and"—with roguish emphasis—"Miss Spitfire. Teddy Boy is lots of fun and Mumsy Darling bakes the most delicious mocha cake every Saturday. Mem-m-m—today is Friday—you wont have long to wait. About 4 tomorrow be prepared to receive Teddy Boy with a generous helping of said mocha cake. A little peace offering for my rude introduction," she concluded with her irresistible laugh.

"I say, but it's jolly good of you," his earnestness thrilled Nancy. Drawing a small whistle from his pocket he blew two short blasts. Almost instantly, it seemed, a smiling little Jap glided from the bungalow. "Here, Mr. Ray."

"Yetsu," ordered his master, "cut the very choicest of those roses Mr. Jack says are such beauties." He turned again to Nancy: "Yetsu is a flower magician. It's characteristic of his race I learned when we toured the Orient. I had my sight then, and the memories I stored up are like luminous bits of fairyland in the present darkness.

She infused an added blithesomeness into her own voice. "Boston and New York comprise my itinerary to date, but I often make dream journeys to far distant lands—always in cherry-blossom time to Japan."

His sensitive fingers traced the velvety petals until convinced of their worthiness. "A little peace offering for Rob Roy's rude introduction."

Nancy laughed merrily at his clever mimicry.

Then, as she stepped nearer to take the roses, she felt a sudden tightening of her throat.

He looked even younger than from the walk—scarcely nineteen. And what at first sight she had dubbed a "sissy" wave covered a deep scar extending across his forehead.

Fearing her silent pity might be misconstrued, Nancy hastened to say enthusiastically: "Such perfect specimens of the Queen of Flowers!"

"You are too good!" His buoyancy matched her own. "When Brother Jack comes out tomorrow I'll get him to coach me in my new role—a most grateful neighbor."

Wonderful days followed; wonderful for Nancy—for the blind boy—and for the man whom sorrow and responsibility had made cruelly old beyond his years.

It was his first glimpse of Nancy that restored John Keniston's most cherished ideals. The memory of it transformed his daily office grind as if by magic. Even the factory's giant dynamos sounded rhythmical.

But though time sped on golden instead of leaden wings, John waxed impatient.

And then, in the purple dusk of a rare autumn day, John sought Nancy.

"Ray made me blissfully happy today," he began boyishly. "He said he had told you of the accident, and you understood my mental torture. God knows the machine, not I, was at fault. Even so, the youngster's very cheerfulness seemed a reproach, until kind fate sent us among you and yours."

He took both Nancy's hands. "Then, dear little miracle woman, I knew it was no longer forced, that I might once again think of love and happiness. His voice became a caress. "Tell me, Nan, sweetheart, have I dreamed aright? Can I tell Ray that when June roses bloom again his offering shall be to Sister instead of Neighbor Golden Heart?"

His compelling gaze made Nancy look up at him. The awakened heart [illegible] in her frank [illegible] eyes.

HAILED AS GREAT DISCOVERY

"Farm Gas" of Excellent Quality Produced in England From Rubbish and Manure Heaps.

A valuable discovery of what may be termed farm gas was made by Lord Elvedon. For nine months without a single failure gas has been produced on Lord Elvedon's Kent farms solely out of his rubbish and manure heap. By piling a part of his manure supply for one day a week in a special and very simple retort he can produce gas of very considerable higher heating and lighting power than the commercial gas of London, says an exchange. These results have now been corroborated and greatly strengthened by help of another series of experiments which are in progress at Rothamstead under skilled chemists, who believe that on an ordinary farm the straw or manure heap may yield at very low expense all the light, heat and power necessary in the house and outbuildings. The discovery may be even more valuable to the empire than to England. The commonest reed of the Nile is especially rich in gas. One of the most important of the recent discoveries is that straw, without any animal manure, will yield the gas in great volume and purity, and that gas may be extracted from almost any vegetable refuse without the use of any other power than its own dissolution.

Cultured Pearl Is Never Large.

There is a considerable discussion among pearl dealers as to the standing of the cultured pearl. Although it is made by exactly the same process as the real pearl, there is a difference which is readily detected by experts. It is claimed on behalf of the naturally grown pearl that the cultured pearls never grow to any great size, five to seven grains being the limit. It is also claimed that the cultured pearl lacks any warmth of color which is generally present in the natural pearl.

The oldest house in Scotland, Glamis castle, which has been inhabited by Lord Strathmore's family for 600 years in direct line from father to son, was built in 1016. The vaulted crypt and the stone-flagged hall leading out of it have not been altered since the Eleventh century, nor has the room above where Malcolm II of Scotland was murdered in 1034. Glamis abounds with interesting relics, including the only complete fool's dress of motley known to exist in the United Kingdom.

DEATH SUMMONS THOS. K. HOVET

Dies Early Monday Morning At Thief River Falls Hospital Following Operation.

This community received a severe shock Monday to learn that Tom K. Hovet, manager of the Farmers' Elevator, had passed away early that morning at a hospital at Thief River.

He was taken ill last Thursday but thought it of no importance until evening when he grew much worse. An examination revealed that he was suffering from appendicitis and that an operation at earliest possible time was necessary. He was taken to the hospital that evening, the operation being performed shortly after his arrival. He rallied nicely and very encouraging reports were received by the family as late as Sunday evening. At 4 o'clock Monday morning a message came stating he was worse, but before Mrs. Hovet and children were able to reach his bedside, he passed away.

Mr. Hovet was but 45 years and six months of age at the time of death. He was born in Fillmore county, this state, on July 16, 1876. In 1878 he came with his parents to Buxton, N. D., where they made their home on a farm and where Tom grew to manhood. In the spring of 1901 he was united in marriage to Miss Thea Nomeland at Crookston, and shortly after they came to St. Hilsire where they have since made their home. In earlier years he was a trusted employee of the mill company here, holding a responsible position as boom foreman. After the mill went out he was caretaker of the mill property at this place. He was interested in village affairs and served on the village council for a time. At time of his death he was chief of the village fire department. A few years ago he became manager of the Farmers' elevator in which position he was a great success.

He was a loyal citizen, a valued friend and a good neighbor, one highly esteemed by all with whom he came in contact, and his sudden death is a matter of deep regret to the whole community. To mourn the loss of a devoted husband and father, he leaves his widow and four children. The latter are: Esther, Frances, Kennard and Thomas, Jr., all living at home with exception of Esther, who attends school at Moorhead. Besides the immediate family he leaves three brothers, Albert, Knute and Ole, a sister, Mrs. Locken, in Dakota, another sister in Canada. besides a large number of other relatives near the old home at Buxton.

Heartfelt sympathy of the community is extended to the bereaved relatives in their great loss.

Funeral services were conducted yesterday afternoon from the Norwegian Lutheran church of which Mr. Hovet was a member. Rev. C. M. Grimsrud in his funeral oration paid glowing tribute to the deceased. Members of the local I. O. O. F. lodge of which Mr. Hovet had been a member for fourteen years, acted as pall bearers. Interment was made in the family plot at the Swedish cemetery east of town.

Declamatory Contest

As announced last week, a declamatory contest will be held at the Imperial Hall Friday evening this week. A preliminary contest was held at school recently and the three highest scoring contestants of both boys and girls were selected for the contest Friday. The two scoring highest this week will be awarded the school medals and will represent St. Hilaire at the district meet next week. Contesant scoring most points here will have his or her name engraved on the school loving cup. Admission will be 15 and 25 cents Friday night.

Schedule Games

The City basketball team is leaving next week for a tour up the line. They have games scheduled with Warroad' Greenbush and Holt. The boys have put in a lot of time practicing lately and should give a good account of themselves in all three games.

Erickson--Larson

On Wednesday afternoon at the Swedish Mission parsonage at Thief River Falls occured the marriage of Miss Edith Erickson of this village, to Mr. Albert Larson of Middle River. Rev. O, J. Lundell officiated. The young couple were attended by Miss Judith Erickson and Dean Huddleson both of this place. Many friends join in extending congratulations to Mr. and Mrs. Larson.

Father Dies

William Cuno received word Monday that his father had passed away at the State Hospital for Insane in which he had been a patient for a number of years. The old gentleman, who had attained a ripe old age, was well known to most of the older residents since he made his home on his farm south of town. William went down Monday to bring back the remains which we understand were shipped to Red Lake Falls for interment. A son, Fritz Cuno, came down yesterday from Grygla to attend the funeral.

George Fink Is Dead

The following from the Crookston Daily Times is the first information received here of the death of George Fink, who with his brother, Henry, operated their farm in Polk Center west of here for a number of years until in February, 1920, when they sold out. George had many friends in this vicinity who will be grieved to learn of his sudden death.

"Henry Fink has received the sad news from Bremen, Germany, of the death of his brother, George, who left here about a year ago to visit with his aged parents, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Fink, and other relatives. A ruptured blood vessel was the cause of death. Deceased was 44 years of age and had been a resident of this community for the past 20 years. He has many friends here who will be grieved to learn of his death. Surviving are three brothers, Henry of this city; Hugo, Breman, Germany; and Alfred who sailed from New York on Dec. 10 and was on the water at the time of his brother's death, and his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Fink. George Fink arrived at the parental home on Dec. 13, 1920, and died on the same day and hour a year later. Funeral services were conducted and interment made on Dec. 18th."

25 Per-cent Dividend

The centralized livestock marketing agency established six months ago by Minnesota farmers has announced a 25 per cent patronage dividend amounting to more than all the money paid into its treasury by its member associations. It also announced an eight per cent stock dividend. Issuance of this dividend means that the co-operative agency has handled the largest volume of business in So. St. Paul at one-half the cost of marketing thru non-co-operative agencies. According to figures given, the agency will return to farmers a little more than $4.00 per car for every load of stock shipped to the agency. The directors also announced that J. S. Montgomery, who was closely associated with Mr. McKerrow until his death, has been elected to succeed Mr. McKerrow as general manager.

Defeated Twice

Thief River's Independent basketball team were defeated twice last week when they met the fast Two Harbors aggregation Thursday and Friday nights. The visitors had a walkaway the first night but the second game was hotly contested, the visitors being held to a tie score. An extra ten minutes was played to break the tie during which Two Harbors managed to garner two points and won the game. People from here who saw the last game state it was the best they had ever seen.

CHIPPEWA TRAIL NEW EXTENSION

Going Thru Here From Red Lake Falls To Grafton, No. Dak.

Notice was received too late for publication last week from E. G. Buse of Red Lake Falls, Secretary of the Chippewa Trail Association that an order had been issued by that organization for an extension of the Trail beginning at Red Lake Falls, the northern terminus of said trail, running to St. Hilaire, Thief River Falls, Warren, Alverado, Oslo, in Minnesota, Ardock, Minto, and Grafton in North Dakota, terminating for the present at Grafton. The trail which begins at Detroit runs north from there thru a number of very good towns. As now laid out, it will be the principal highway from northern Dakota to the lake region of Minnesota and there is no doubt but that it will be the means of bringing a great number of tourists this way every summer. From Red Lake Falls to where the Jefferson Highway leads off north west of Thief River, the Chippewa Trail will follow the same route as the Jefferson.

Entertain At Luncheon

Mrs. Geo. Wilson Sr., of Minneapolis, was hostess at a luncheon last Friday afternoon in compliment to her mother, Mrs. Wm. Olson, who has visited with her the past three weeks. Most of the guests were former St. Hilaire people, among whom were: Mrs. C. Swanson, Mrs. R. Wallen, Mrs. O. Stearns, formerly Miss Selma Simonson, Mrs. Bert Brenner, Mrs. Roy Baxter, Mrs Torgeson, formerly Miss Ella Skeie, and the Misses Hazel Wallin, Edith Nelson and Ruth Gigstad.

Person--Nordin

Last Saturday evening at the Methodist parsonage at Crookston occured the marriage of Miss. Hulda Person, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Nels Person of this village, to Mr. Axel Nordin of Crookston. Rev. F. W. Hill preformed the ceremony. The young couple will make their home at Crookston where the groom holds a responsible position with the Sampson Bakery.

They arrived here Monday morning for a short visit with the bride's parents. Local friends extend congratulations.

New Dollar Arrives

The new "Peace" dollar has arrived in St, Hilaire, shipments being received by both banks last week. The new coin is slightly thicker than the old and has a thin edge at both top and bottom which make them difficult to pile. The head of "Liberty" on the front is well executed but the dove on back bears a close resemblance to the famous war eagle on "Old Abe".

In spite of the fact that they are not our idea of a well balanced coin, the Spectator is willing to accept them in any amount on subscription accounts.

Mailing Statements

In accordance with yearly custom, the Spectator is mailing statements of account to all subscribers who appear on our books as being in arrears Jan. 1st, or after. A list of those who make subscription payments will be published from time in time in lieu of sending receipts.

While we realize that money is not as plentiful as it might be, we have regular weekly expenses to meet that make it imperative these accounts be collected. None of them are large, but all together they total up to a neat sum. We hope everyone receiving a statement will either write or call whether they pay or not as we will gladly extend for those who cannot pay at this time if they will tell us so.

The margin of profit on subscriptions is so small that an account in arrears for even one year is considered a liability instead of an asset. Make use of the return envelope enclosed with statement and see that your name is on the paid up list.

The Lincoln highway is said to be the longest road in the world. It connects 12 states and is laid out between New York and San Francisco, in as direct a line as possible consistent with the topography of the country. Its length is about 3,284 miles.

Who Owns the Earth?

It is estimated that there are 57,255,000 square miles of land on the earth. Of this number about 29,000,000 square miles are fertile. Great Britain claims 14,500,000 square miles—almost half; the balance is unequally divided among many other nations.

Events & the Week

The week of February 6-10, 1922, promises to be an eventful one in the Red River Valley. Ever since the first Northwest School Farmers' Short Course was held, in 1910, this annual event has grown in scope and importance, showing in a very concrete way the wonderful progress that is being made in farming. It has brought state and national leaders to the Valley who have given messages of instruction and inspiration valuable to all.

The events of the week are:

FARM CROPS EXHIBITS, including corn, potatoes, grains and grasses, and corn and potato exhibits by Boys' and Girls' Club members. For this show premiums aggregating $1,500.00 are provided by Minnesota Red River Valley Development association, including $500.00 given by the Minnesota Crop Improvement association as special awards for the Red River Valley Crops Show. A corn and potato judging contest is also held in connection with this exhibit.

The Farm Crops Show is held on the first and second floors of the Live Stock Sales Pavilion, located next to the Armory.

LIVE STOCK SHOW, including pure bred beef and dairy cattle, swine and sheep of all the breeds, and a Junior Live Stock Show for exhibits of dairy and baby beef calves, sheep and swine by Boys' and Girls' Club members. For this show premiums aggregating $3,000.00 are provided by the Red River Valley Live Stock association, whose 1900 members own the three splendid buildings shown above, having a floor area of about 1½ acres.

The winter live stock show was begun in 1917, when 68 head were exhibited in a rented building. Over 500 head were entered in the 1921 show.

Sales of pure bred stock are held every day after the judging is completed. The 1919 sales aggregated over $100,000.

Live Stock judging contests are held every year for farm club and township team members, high and consolidated school teams, and the Northwest School of Agriculture. Prominent live stock breeders and college experts do the judging in the sales arena, where hundreds have an opportunity of seeing the stock shown.

POULTRY SHOW, including poultry from the most successful farmers and poultry raisers in the state, and a Junior Department, as well. For this show premiums aggregating $600.00 are provided by the Northern Minnesota Poultry association. The poultry exhibit will be held on the second floor of Annex B, facing Fourth Street.

INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITS, embracing farm machinery of all kinds, feeds, seeds, tractors, and all the equipment necessary for successful farming, as well as household equipment, have become an important part of the week's shows.

EDUCATIONAL EXHIBITS, by the University of Minnesota, Northwest Experiment Station, Crookston; County Farm Bureaus of northwestern Minnesota counties; Boys' and Girls' Club work and other organizations and institutions form an increasingly important part of the week's enterprises.

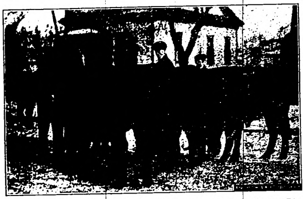
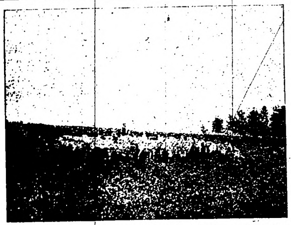
Northwestern Minnesota Counties

Join in Holding Largest Shows in State

Crookston - February 6-10, 1922

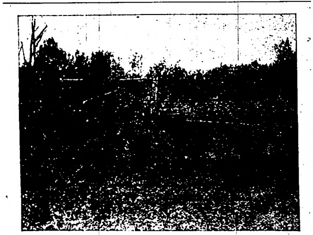


Unexcelled herds of beef cattle are found in every county of the Red River Valley. You'll see them at the Show.



Sheep are found in every county. Pure bred flocks are increasing. The sheep exhibit is a feature of the Red River Valley Winter Shows.

Poultry—pure bred flocks of all the standard breeds. Every county has a local show which will exhibit its winners at the Valley Show.



Northwestern Minnesota swine industry is increasing by leaps and bounds. The February Swine Show is hard to beat.

Wheat fields, majestic in their greatness, dot the prairies, furnishing food to the entire world.

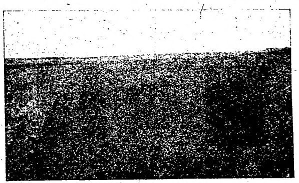
GREAT EVENTS

THEY have been made so by the unselfish work of hundreds of the progressive farmers and town-folk of this section of the state. They will be at the Shows and meetings. Plan to meet them there.

DON'T forget that your local newspaper is the best booster you have for your Valley, your County and your Community. Without their hearty co-operation, this Supplement could not have been seen by the thousands who will read it.

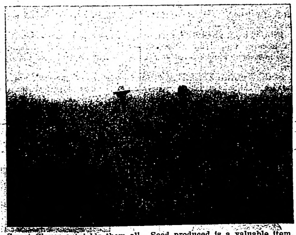
REDUCED FARES ON ALL RAIROADS. SECURE CERTIFICATE WHEN YOU BUY YOUR TICKET.

Dairy cows easily lead in Northwestern Minnesota; 120 of the best creameries in the state are located here. Pure bred Guernseys, Holsteins and Jerseys at the Show include the world's best breeding lines.

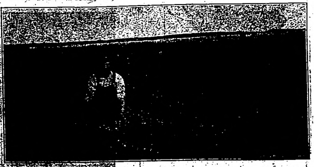


Clover and alfalfa from the northern boundary to the southern limits. Exhibits in sheafs and of seed at the Farm Crops Show.

Corn on every farm—for feed and silage—is the Red River Valley slogan. And it's coming true.



Sweet Clover outyields them all. Seed produced is a valuable item. It's a Valley staple.



And spuds! You've heard of Red River Valley potatoes. There are none better.

A JOB FOR PIGGY

By DORA NUTE.

© 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

As she worked around the room the nurse remonstrated with Piggy.

"Why don't you try to like the basket weaving so you can sit out on the veranda in the shade, Piggy?"

Piggy sat in his usual solitary grandeur, with his eyes closed, and murmured in a tired voice:

"Rave on, little one, rave on. You bring back fond memories of Nancy, me father's good old goat, after she had made a meal on his red flannel shirt."

"Well, you had better be fixed up for visitors this afternoon. I heard the superintendent telling someone on the phone how to reach here, and they had been asking for you."

"You're off again. And who would be calling on me? If your muscles were developed the way your imagination is, you would be meeting this here Carpentier instead of Dempsey."

Just then the superintendent's voice sounded in the hall. "Is Mr. M. ready to receive a visitor, nurse?"

Piggy sat with closed eyes; none of that bunch could pull any of this horse-play on him. He knew they were all waiting for his downfall. Although a brave soldier with a citation to his credit, Piggy's best friends at the Memorial Home had to admit that the superintendent's order that Piggy could not join the others on the veranda was just after his last sarcastic description of the art of basket weaving, accompanied by a flood of vituperation for the doctors who had allowed him to live when both legs were taken off.

In answer to the nurse's question, "Aren't you going to speak to your visitor?" he vouchsafed a characteristic grunt, and lifting his eyelids, a trifle, noted the visitor wore black and carried a bulky article draped in a turkey tablecloth. As the nurse withdrew the visitor drew off the tablecloth from the parcel and the room was immediately flooded with a canary's joyous song, interspersed with trills of delight at this release from the dark wrapping.

Piggy's eyes snapped open and his mouth automatically puckered into the old calling whistle which he had taught Maggie that summer when he broke his leg and had to sit out on the old piazza with no company but his little lame neighbor and her canary.

Only now, he remembered bitterly, instead of a game leg that would be all right shortly, he was minus two perfectly good legs, and what good was a teamster without legs, even if he kept his tongue well oiled and in action? As his scowl gathered, his visitor seemed to lose complete use of her voice. So it fell on Piggy to open the conversation.

"Well, do my eyes deceive me? It's little Maggie."

"It's me," came the shy reply, "and Dannie."

"Sure, and a big woman you've grown to be, too. And how's the folks?"

The girl struggled to speak, but the big sob which rose checked her. Finally she explained that the mother was gone, and, of course, she couldn't hope to keep the children together; they had to go to live with her sister Nora.

"And now she says that Danny is a nuisance; that his singing wakes the baby, it's that shrill. And never a window can you open without him getting a chill, and she's sick of him, and he's got to go. So I brought him out to you. I thought maybe you could take care of him."

The old spirit of battle surged into Piggy's breast. If that woman, with her bitter old tongue, thought she could put him out into the cold, the bird he had trained to trill and call, she had another guess coming. Careful questioning brought out the fact that she would be glad to be rid of the crippled sister, too. As for the boys, they only came home for meals and to sleep. Piggy gave the matter a few moments' careful consideration, and then he gave his ultimatum.

"What you are needing is a home of your own. Take now that tenement down by the gashouse. It's a fine, sunny place to raise a flock of canaries, and the old mother left me the furnishings of the old home, and they're packed in Hogan's barn. There would be plenty of room for the boys to grow up, and with my pension and the bit we could get raising canaries—you need a man to watch the expenses and teach them to sing—we could make out fine."

When the overjoyed but still bewildered girl had departed, Piggy sent for the superintendent and explained: "I've got me a job. I'm leaving."

The superintendent and the romantic nurse immediately joined hands and danced around the silent figure with closed eyes, to the tune of "Piggy's got a job, Piggy's got a job, ho, ho."

Band Carries Its Own Shell.

One band at Pacific Grove, Cal., gives concerts in a shell which they carry away with them, says Popular Mechanics. The shell is mounted on a condemned fire truck and moves about from place to place between Pacific Grove and the beach nearby, for use in concerts at different places. The shell floor is 20 feet long, with a ten-foot radius. A shelf hinges to the shell, which may be raised while the truck is en route, providing additional space.

Resolution of Condolence

Whereas, the great and Supreme Ruler of the Universe has in his infinite wisdom removed from among us, one of our worthy and esteemed brothers, Thomas K. Hovet: and whereas, the long and intimate relation held with him in the faithful discharge of his duties as an Odd Fellow, and as citizen of our great State, makes it eminently befitting that we record our appreciation of him, therefore,

Be It Resolved, That the wisdom and ability which he has exercised in the aid of Odd Fellowship by service, contributions and counsel; and the honest, upright and honorable life he led as an American citizen, will be held in grateful remembrance.

Be It Resolved, That the sudden removal of such a life and character from our midst leaves a vacancy and sorrow that will be deeply realized by all good Odd Fellows, and will prove a serious loss to our beloved order.

Be It Resolved, That with deep sympathy with the bereaved family of the deceased, we express our hope that so great a loss to us all will be overruled for good by Him who doeth all things well:

Be It Further Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the records of St. Hilaire Lodge No. 147, I. O. O. F., that a copy be sent to the family of our beloved Brother, and a copy be published in the St. Hilaire Spectator.

Becomes Matter of Habit.

Thinking is a habit and at the time we are in the habit of thinking we think best. Children, for instance, think best in the hours when they are in school, because that is the time that they are accustomed to do their thinking. Writers and philosophers think best at the time they have daily set aside for thinking; newspaper men on an afternoon paper think best in the morning, and those on a morning paper think best at night. There can be no set time for best thinking, no rule to go by.

GIANT FRENCH MUSHROOM.

Two mammoth mushrooms, enough to "smother" all the steaks available in a hind quarter of a beef, have just been found in France.

Four feet in diameter and weighing between nine and ten pounds, the first one was found on an estate in Saint Germain. The species is edible and is known popularly in the district as the "death's head" mushroom.

The other, known as the "beaded puff-ball," has been picked at Bourgneuf. It weighs close to nine pounds and has a "flap" diameter of nearly 20 inches.

Japanese Claims His Countrymen, Far Back in History, Found and Settled in America.

To most illustrious and distinguished editor of Evening Post from very humble servant, the insignificant Lee Toy:

The lowly bearer of magic peacock fan extends most sincere regards to all eminent magi of blue pencil.

The most humble one seeks to correct most clever article in your honorable paper of date today.

Most honorable gentleman by name called Hayndman is correct up to certain point, but your humble slave craves to set down most important fact.

In our history, date of which goes too far back to date of beginning, one of our great historians, called Yong Toy, who is remote ancestor of writer, has written that in year 3000 B. C. large village did leave central part of China and travel north to cold country and did cross body of water that was hard like stone due to cold. After crossing they made way south and were seen no more until 2000 B. C., when three men were picked up in a boat who had same name as people of ancient village, and who told strange tale of new China on other side of world.

All wise men of China know that Indians in America are children of old ancient village people.

If America really wants to give credit of great discovery, why, most learned editor, not give credit to humble countrymen of mine? LEE TOY.—Chicago Evening Post.

LINK TO PREHISTORIC TIMES

Discovery Made in South America Strengthens Theory Long Held Concerning Ancient Land Bridge.

A report has been published by the Field Museum of Natural History, at Chicago, describing an animal discovered in South America, which is a survivor of a prehistoric period. This animal known as Cenolestes, is small and looks like a sharp-nosed rat, but is different from any other living animal. Its bones and teeth are essentially the same as those of a group of animals now extinct and known only through fossils hundreds of thousands of years old. It has a pouch like the kangaroo, and its existence may indicate some truth in the theory that South America and Australia were connected by land in prehistoric times, since pouched animals exist in both places. The original stock may have spread from South America to Australia, or vice versa, or it may have originated in a long-vanished continent, the so-called Antarctica, and spread north to both continents, over a land bridge, which is supposed to have linked the three.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Dances Borrowed From Birds.

Like the art of song, that of the dance is employed by many birds primarily in the courtship of the female. The biggest bird of all—the ostrich—is a most indefatigable dancer, particularly enjoying the waltz. The moor cock is another dancing bird, from which the peasants of upper Bavaria have borrowed their famous "flat shoe dance," or clog dance.

SUBSTITUTE FOR TEA.

The active principle of tea is "theine." That of coffee is caffeine. But caffeine and theine are exactly the same thing.

This agreeably stimulating alkaloid is found in other plants, one of which grows wild and plentifully in the South Atlantic states, where it is called "yaupon," or sometimes "Christmas-berry tree."

The Indians brewed a beverage from the leaves of the yaupon long before the first white man landed on this continent; and during the Civil war it was used as a substitute for tea by people in the South.

The government plant bureau is experimenting with it, in the belief that the leaves, when properly cured after the manner of tea, will furnish a palatable cup at a much less cost.—Philadelphia Ledger.

AUSTRALIA SEEKS FARMERS.

Efforts are being made by the Australians to get the English farmers to the number of 1,000,000 to emigrate to that country. A special bid is made for unemployed service men and the land offered to them is said to be very rich and capable of growing a variety of crops. Taking advantage of the situation, the Japanese have sent a representative to that country, and he is endeavoring to secure the approval to the entrance of a limited number of Japanese farmers.

TRAFFIC SIGNAL ON SPRINGS.

The frequent destruction of boulevard crossing lights by motorists has led to the development of a traffic signal on springs, says the Popular Mechanics Magazine in an illustrated article. The new signal post stands over a cavity or box set below the surface. At the top of the box are four arms with spring bearings. On these rest a cast iron ball ten inches in diameter. A heavy spiral spring connects a ring at the bottom of the box with another on the ball. The post, which is made of sheet metal, is riveted to the ball. "Slow Down" and "Stop" signs are set into the side in red glass. Lights inside the pole make it conspicuous at night. Street names appear at the top.

Keifenheim Arrested

Ed. Keifenheim, prominent Red Lake Falls man, was haled into court last week for alleged selling of booze. Several witnesses were called, who claimed they purchased moonshine from the defendant both in bottles and over the bar at his place of business. The Red Lake Falls Gazette says though moonshine has flowed freely in that city the past two years, this is the first arrest of local parties ver made by county authorities.

AIR

By MYRTA ALICE LITTLE.

© 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

The exasperated chairman of the state fair room committee mopped his tortured brow and faced the main causes of the torture. There were two of them, Hepzibah Pepper—chunky, bespectacled and determined, and her husband Ichabod—lank, scared, long-suffering victim of Hep's notions, chiefly her notions about air.

"I can't find you folks any room in this city with four windows in it. All taken. Move on, Mrs. Pepper. Give the rest of the folks a chance."

Hepzibah glared. Her voice boomed. "I tell ye, we've come ter this state fair, and I've entered my pound for pound cake and my crazy silk comfortable, and we've got four winders in our room ter home. I was brought up with four winders. I'll die without 'em. Ich, he promised if I'd come with him—he'd—"

A feeble tap from Ich's nervous fingers only added zest to Hep's tirade. "I tell ye, Mr. Chairman, I'll plant m'self right here b' this desk o' yourn, this time, till ye tell us where we c'n go ter find thet room with four winders in it."

"Here, madam; here's your room!" A change had come over the irate chairman. In his hand he held a key. "Mrs. Pepper, I'm sending a woman over to show you your room."

"Four windows?" interrupted Hepzibah Pepper.

"On my word of honor, four windows, Mrs. Pepper," grinned the chairman. "Now, go!"

Hep went, footsore, but triumphant, dragging her trembling spouse behind her.

"All imagination!" grumbled Ich, spasmodically. "Air! Air! Air! Hope 'tis to the poor farm she's takin' us, er ter the jail! Serve yer right!"

"Shet up!" said Hepzibah scornfully.

Their destination proved to be a pretentious frame dwelling in the suburbs, whose parlor was indeed provided with a bed lounge, stuffed chairs and glass bookcases, but principally with the four windows. Hep dropped into a chair. The woman opened the bed and vanished. There was a grin on her face.

"Don't yer light the gas! There's light 'nough from the street," Hep announced. "An' yer ain't goin' ter drag me roun' ter look at no hens termorrer. Go ter bed, ef yer so beat out; I'll tend ter the winders."

Ich went, and slept directly the sleep of the suffering just. He was aroused by a terrific clutching in the region of his arms.

"Get up an' open 'em, Ich; I can't find the fasteners. I'm faintin'. Get up—"

"Plenty of air comin' in roun' the casin's," murmured Ich sleepily.

Hep's ready fists came into use. "Shet up an' open them winders," she snapped.

Ich arose and began fumbling around in the half darkness. "I'll fix 'em," muttered Ich Pepper. "Ev'ry last winder!" There followed the awful sound of crashing, splintering glass.

"I can feel it—the good fresh air from all four winders," she breathed. 'Ye've saved my life, Ich, ye've saved ——" Hep's response to the crashes and the consequent floods of ozone was complete. She slept like a nice gray cat till morning.

It was a morning of revelations. Hep's pound for pound cake wore a blue ribbon, and her crazy comforter wore a red ribbon, and the room committee chairman wore a life-size grin that expanded with every word which Ich Pepper spoke to him. Moreover, the chairman accepted the greenbacks which Ich offered, though he made the cryptic remarks: "Worth it, the bother, the laugh I've had. I start for Florida tomorrow. Family been there a week. 'S why my house was shut up. I knew you folks were all right. Looked you up. So I let you in. Sure, the windows were fastened down, but your wife didn't specify the opening variety to me."

The chairman's remarks ceased being cryptic when the news spread over the fair grounds that the glass which Ichabod Pepper, half asleep and wholly desperate, had demolished to let in the ozone that had saved Hep's life, was not in one of the four windows, but in the glass doors of the book cases which lined the walls of the parlor bedroom.

"Reckon we'll hev a reasonable lot o' air in our room the res' o' our lives," Ich chuckled.

"Shet up!" advised Hepzibah, grimly.

"Don' hev ter shet up!" declared Ichabod. "Talk when I like an' what I like: Shet up yerself. Now come an' look at the Plymouth Rocks."

Hep came and looked. Ich had come to his own.

Stamps of Spain and Holland.

Next to Queen Victoria, the two other feminine monarchs whose portraits on postage stamps are most familiar are Queen Isabella II of Spain and Queen Wilhelmina of Holland. There are 172 varieties of the Spanish Isabella stamps, the higher value in each issue being quite rare, and about 150 varieties with Wilhelmina's portrait. The first Dutch issue portraying Queen Wilhelmina showed her as a little girl. That remained for several years until the queen, becoming tired of seeing her youthful portrait, changed it in 1908 for the pleasing portrait which still remains in use on the stamps of Holland.

Bray Mutual Statement

In this issue will be found the annual statement of the condition of the Bray Mutual Fire Insurance Company. The statement shows the company had two unpaid claims amounting to $825.00 from the previous year. It had six losses amounting to $2,887.00 during the fiscal year, and it has paid all with the exception of $400.00. Tho the company has levied no assessment during 1921, it still has a balance of over a thousand dollars in cash on hand. The total insurance in force at end of 1921 is considerable larger than for the previous year which is an indication that the farmers are fully alive to the value of that class of insurance which is by far the lowest priced obtainable.

Big Week Planned

The Red River Valley Winter Shows to be held at Crookston, February 6-10 are creating much interest. Pure bred livestock sales will be held on Wednesday and Thursday. February 8 and 9. See list of livestock to be sold given in another column. Leading speakers are coming during the week, including Dean W. C. Coffey, W. I. Nolan, J. F. Reed, Governor Preus and President Coffman. Farm Crops, livestock and poultry exhibits will be held. The song festival which will take place on Wednesday evening, Feb 8, will include over 200 voices from 12 valley communities.

Make Saving

The power of co-operation was demonstrated the other day when the Minnesota Co-operative creameries association disclosed that as a buying agency representing 280 co-operative creameries it had obtained bids on creamery equipment 20 per cent below prevailing prices. Other savings are being made in purchase of tubs and other supplies in carload lots.

Winners Chosen

In the declamatory contest held last Friday evening for the purpose of choosing representatives from the local school to take part in the Red River Valley and State contests to be held later, Blanche Robson and Melvin Sherva were declared winners from a field of six contestants. Miss Robson had as her selection, "Molly's Boy" while Melvin Sherva had Patrick Henry's famous speech, "Liberty or Death." As scored by the percentage system, the two winners were tie. As later decided by the judges Miss Robson received the honor of having her name engraved on the school loving cup, and both winners are each awarded the school medals. Margaret Patterson, Vivienne Novak, Sigurd Engh and Knute Odgaard were the other contestants. Herman Anderson of this place and two members of the Thief River high schol faculty acted as judges.

Form Dancing Club

A number of young folks about town have decided to have a dancing club here. Membership is not limited in any way, and married or single folks from either town or country are cordially invited. The first meeting will be held at the Imperial Hall next Saturday evening at which time all who wish to join are requested to be present. As these dances will be conducted by and for members of the club only, it will do away with attendance by rough element from nearby towns which will insure a good time to those who belong to the club.

Want Lower Rates

The American Farm Bureau federation, backed by state federaions, is making a vigorous attack on railroad freight rates. A general rate investigation is under way before the Interstate Commerce commission and it is to be hoped the Farm Bureau federation will be upheld in their contention for lower rates. Anyone who has had occasion to pay freight charges, either direct or indirectly, the past two years, know only too well that present rates are beyond all reason.

The Wilson Foundation

Miss Selma Hoff is acting as local chairman for the "Woodrow Wilson Foundation". This foundation, which, although a tribute to the former President, is chiefly to perpetuate his ideals of democracy and human freedom in such form as to be both an inspiration and a reward to other men whose ambition it is "to enable the world to live more amply, with greater vision, and with a finer spirit of hope and achievement." The object of the Foundation is to endow permanent awards to the individual or group that has rendered within a specified period, meritous service to democracy, public welfare, liberal thought or peace thru justice.

The appeal to the public is for an endowment of a million dollars or more. Small contributions of dimes and quarters are solicited so that anyone desiring to make a donation, may feel able to give something. No drive will be made but voluntary subscriptions may be left with Selma O. Hoff who will issue a receipt to each subscriber.

Demand Price Cut

Highway executives of eight states, now in session at Chicago, have declared a buyer's strike on cement, as they consider present prices to be out of reason. A ten per cent cut is asked. If this be not forthcoming, a recommendation was made that the states represented should investigate possibilities of building state-owned mills for production of cement needed in building highways.

Official Paper of the Village.

Entered as Second class matter July 8th, 1882, at the postoffice at St. Hilaire Minn., under the act of July 16th, 1881

Published every Thursday at St. Hilaire, Pennington Co., Minnesota.

Subscribers should notify the publisher on or before expiration of subscription if discontinuance is desired, otherwise the paper will be continued. REMITTANCES should be made by postal money order or express order, short-time subscriptions in 2-cent stamps

To our rural friends who desire to make payment of subscription account and who may lack ready cash for the time being, we will state that such produce as we can use will be accepted at market price, and also trade checks and due bills on merchants in the village. We too, realize what conditions are at present, and are therefore willing to co-operate in every way possible.

Publicity inspires confidence in all matters wherein the public is interested. This is the main reason why annual statements are made and published by various kinds of corporations. At the present time when taxpayers are called upon for more taxes with which to operate public utilites, they are vitally interested in knowing how that money is spent which knowledge also gives them the reason why more taxes are necessary.

The local school district, which takes the largest share of the taxes raised here for its maintenance, does not publish its proceedings, nor give a comprehensive annual statement for edification of the tax payers. This is not intended to cast any reflection upon members of the board who are serving with mighty little compensation, and are administering the school affairs to the best of their ability. They are serving well and the public should be acquainted with that fact. The law requires the board proceedings to be published Since the board would be strictly within its rights to cause publication of all matters pertaining to the schools, there is no reason why it should not be done. This is the only district between Crookston and Warrod which does not publish proceedings.

Granting this agitation is to some extent selfish on part of the publisher, a majority of the tax payers will no doubt feel they are entitled to the information derived from publication of the school proceedings.

NATIONAL TRIBUTE TO WILSON UNDER WAY

Campaign Starts for $1,000,000 or More to Endow Foundation in ex-President's Name.

F. D. ROOSEVELT CHAIRMAN

New York.—Prominent men and women have organized in every state in the country in a campaign opening the week of January 16 to raise $1,000,000 or more to endow the Woodrow Wilson Foundation, which is designed to honor Mr. Wilson and perpetuate his ideals. The income from this sum will provide the Woodrow Wilson Awards to be given periodically to "the individual or group that has rendered, within a specified period, meritorious service to democracy, public welfare, liberal thought, or peace through justice."

The National Committee, headed by Franklin D. Roosevelt, Democratic candidate for Vice-President in 1920, includes representatives of each state. Cleveland H. Dodge of New York is chairman of the Executive Committee and Hamilton Holt is Executive Director. Fifteen nationally known men and women will comprise the permanent Board of Trustees, which must invest the funds in United States or other recognized securities.

Weights were originally taken from grains of wheat. The Jews ascribed weights and measures to Cain, the Egyptians to Inoth and the Greeks to Hermes. An interesting series of copper weights (now in the British museum), admirably modeled in the form of lions, 16 in number, and diminishing in regular graduation from one foot to one inch in length, was discovered by Sir Austen Henry Layard, the noted English archeologist, in the northwest palace at Nimrud (pointed out by tradition as the site of Nineveh).

Success.

"No real man ever reaches what he calls 'success,'" said one of the biggest business men in this country. No one with high ideals is ever satisfied with his own achievement. With every high point gained, some higher peak still looms ahead. Because the high spirit reaches earth's last boundary and finds the goal still unattained, there must be new opportunities still waiting beyond. Even the desert mirage is but a reflection of what really exists somewhere.

Altitude.

Altitude in astronomy is the vertical height of any point or body above the horizon. It is measured or estimated by the angle suspended between the object and the plane of the horizon, and may be either true or apparent. The apparent altitude is that which is obtained immediately from observation; the true altitude, that which results from correcting the apparent altitude, by making allowance for parallax, refraction, etc.

Life as I See It.

They say men do not and cannot understand women. I see many women striving to make men of worthless material, and succeeding, too. There is in this something so near to the divine that I do not seek to understand it. I simply doff my hat in its presence as I would in a temple.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Simple Rule to Remember.

When should "fewer" be used, and when should "less"? Is it correct, for example, to say "I have no 'less' than 100 bushels"? The rule to avoid this common mistake is to remember that fewer is used when referring to numbers—as in the above example—and less when referring to quantity.

Statesman's Advice.

We should do nothing inconsistent with the spirit and genius of our institutions. We should do nothing for revenge, but everything for security; nothing for the past, everything for the present and the future.—James A. Garfield.

Really Poor People.

People reckon themselves poor as they lack money, yet there is a greater poverty. Many men and women go through the world unaware of the beauty, the goodness, and the glories in it. Such people, though they have money, are poor indeed.

JUST GUESS

By ARIA E. CUTTING.

© 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

"There! That settles his hash!"

With a look that startled an innocent student in a front seat, Miss Mason, teacher at District School No. 7, crushed a letter in her hand and cast it into the waste basket.

"Earl! Are those examples all done?"

"Nope."

"Then get to work."

Shirley felt a pang of remorse immediately after her last words. Ten-year-old Earl looked at her in amazement; then there flashed in his eyes a hurt expression. In another instant Earl was puzzling over his examples.

"Golly! Why should she get mad at me? I didn't do anything. Let's see. If Rover drove 120 cows to pasture and 1-5 were lost—Oh! I can't—I guess—"

At that moment the recess bell rang. Waiting outside by the door stood a great shepherd dog.

"Hello, old girl," cried Earl, as the dog ran to greet him. "Be good now and come with me."

Earl went back into the room, the dog following at his heels.

"Miss Mason," began Earl, feeling rather uncomfortable, "this is my new dog. Uncle is coming home soon and he sent me her. Isn't she a beauty?"

Shirley said nothing for a moment. Then—

"She is very pretty. What's her name?"

"Just guess," replied Earl.

"Oh—is it Rover? Trixie?"

"Why, just Guess."

Puzzled, yet greatly amused, Earl went out, Guess following, giving no cue to Shirley as to what her name was.

"Say, Guess, you'll help me, won't you? We've got to help out Miss Mason. Oh, I love her. Don't you?"

For answer Guess licked her playmate's hand.

Long after school hours were over that afternoon, Earl strolled past the schoolhouse.

"What's the matter?" he thought. "The door's open!"

He went in, Guess following. Everything was in readiness for the morrow's work.

"Well, Guess, she's gone and left the door unlocked. Guess we'd better go, eh, Guess? I'm glad Uncle's come home. Why, Guess!"

The dog had tipped over the waste basket in her frolic. Out tumbled the rumbled paper.

"Gee! It's from Uncle!" he yelled. "He said he had a girl. Now, Guess, keep still—and I'll read it to you."

"'Dearest Shirley—I will see you soon. I will have a big surprise for you. I want to introduce you to a dear little lady—a great companion to me. She'll probably see you before I get there, as she's coming first. What's her name? Just Guess, dear. With love, Rodney.'

"Well, I'll go home and see Uncle Rodney now, and ask him if he's met our schoolteacher. Why couldn't he have let me know about this?"

Down the pathway he met Uncle Rodney, who looked rather anxious.

"Have you seen Miss Mason, Earl?"

"No, not since school closed."

"S'funny."

"I don't think so."

Rodney stared at Earl. Earl stared at Rodney.

"Well, I'll go back and help find her. Isn't she home?"

"No."

Nothing more was said until they reached the schoolhouse. Suddenly Guess came into the room, whining. She ran first to Rodney, then to Earl, and then to the door, several times over.

"We'll follow Guess," commanded Rodney.

Out to the woodshed by the schoolhouse they went. The great door was locked. They heard a cry inside. Guess barked. Earl and Rodney seized the lock and opened the door. Seated on the floor was a very angry, tearful, dishevelled young lady.

"Mr. Porter!"

"Miss Mason—Shirley!"

"Don't call me Shirley! What are you here for? And after writing such a letter?" cried she. "Just guess what her name is. What do you suppose I care—'dear little lady'—my, but this is very serious!" she ended with fine sarcasm.

Rodney stood amazed for an instant; then he broke into a great laugh.

"Well, well! So that's it, is it? Forgive me, Shirley. I'm sorry you misunderstood."

He turned, grasped Guess by her collar, and said:

"This is the little lady I meant. Now, I told you her name in my letter. She's anxious to know you, you see. I knew you liked a great shepherd like her, so I sent her up to be a companion for you and for Earl. She now belongs to Earl. And I am Earl's uncle."

"Oh, dear! Now I see—everything—Guess is her name. I didn't understand it that way." And Shirley burst into tears.

"Well, I'm going out. Come, Guess," cried Earl. And only Guess heard him.

A few minutes later, an impatient Earl peeked through a crack in the door and cried:

"I'm going home, Uncle Rodney. But I'd like to ask Miss Mason who saved her tonight?"

"Just Guess," came a happy, feminine reply.

Farm Crops Show Opens Next Monday

With President Coffman of the University of Minnesota; Gov. J. A. O. Preus; Dean. W. C. Coffey of the agricultural department; W. I. Nolan, speaker of the lower house of the Minnesota legislature during its last session; Mrs. T. G. Winter, president of the National Federation of Womens' Clubs, and others on the speaking program, and with invitations issued to a number of nationally known speakers, the Winter Shows will open at Crookston on Monday, Feb. 6, with the best entertanment program in its twelve years of history. Nothing has been left undone to make this years' show the best ever given.

A large number of exhibits have already been sent down from here, and indications are that this community will be well represented at the big Show.

Dangerous Practice

Someone evidently devoid of sense, shot off one of the insulators on the electric transmission line between Crookston and Grand Forks, says the Crookston Times The shot severed one of the main wires which fell over a private phone line. Fortunately no one was using the line or they would have been killed instantly. As it was, the heavy current set fire to the phone booth in Crookston doing some damage before the circuit was broken by nervy work on part of a lineman. The Red River Power Company has a good sized reward standing for the arrest and conviction of anyone damaging their lines which should be unnecessary if people only knew the danger and chances of sudden death they were taking by fooling with the line.

Community Club

A business meeting of the Community Club will be held at the Imperial Hall after the basketball game Friday night, February 3rd, All members of the club are requested to be present.

Birthday Party

Schoolmates of Gunhild Nelson very pleasantly surprised her at her home last Monday evening the occasion being her birthday anniversary. Games and music furnished the entertainment after which refreshments were served. A pleasant time is reported by all.

A burning bridge! A train in flight! The inevitable result!—A crash to the raging torrent below! One of the incidents in "THE FIGHTER"

Groundhog Day

According to tradition today will decide whether or not the coming spring will be an early one. Today the groundhog will emerge from his winter quarters for his annual weather prognostication. If the day is cloudy so he does not see his shadow, he will stay out which indicates an early spring. Should the day be bright, the opposite will result.

Extends Time For Auto Tax Payment

In a letter recieved by state newspapers last week, Secretary of State Mike Holm announces that the time for payment of auto taxes without penalty has been extended by him from last of this month to the 15th of February. Those who failed to comply with the law last year, will be required to pay the arreas before a new license will be issued. A penalty of 25 cents per day for 30 days or $7.50 in all, is added to unpaid taxes that remain delinquent for 30 days or more.

Elect Manager

At a meeting of the board of the Farmers' elevator company held last Friday for the purpose of electing a manager to succeed the late T. K. Hovet, a number of applications were considered which resulted in naming of Edwin Roy. Mr. Roy has a wide acquaintance in this territory which will stand him in good stead, and he has had enough grain experience so he will have no difficulty on that score. The choice made by the board meets with unauamous approval.

Part of the old Wylie building, an old landmark at Wylie, was burned to the ground a week ago Saturday. The place was occupied by a Mr. Swanberg. The fire was reported to have started from an overheated stove.

The first real snow storm this winter struck this section late Tuesday night. About six inches of snow on the level had fallen when this was printed late last night, and the storm continued unabated.

Theatre Disaster

Over one hundred lives were lost and more than that number injured last Saturday at Washington, D. C. when the roof of a theatre caved in from a heavy load of snow which had fallen to the depth of over two feet in the capitol city that day. Many other casualties are reported from different points in the Atlantic states which were in the path of the storm.

Pays To Deliver Pure, Sweet Cream

Creameries suffering losses due to poor grades of butter are urged by A. J. McGuire, dairy specialist with the agricultural division of the University of Minnesota, to put on an educational campaign among their patrons for improving the quality of their cream.

"Interest can be aroused in having all cream delivered at least twice a week and in improving the methods of handling on the farms for greater care and cleanliness so that pure sweet cream will be delivered," he says. "The wide difference in price between good and poor butter results in serous losses under present conditions and can be prevented."

A continuous loss in the price of butter because of poor quality has led to the failure of creameries Mr. McGuire asserts.

Wins At Thief River

In the declamatory contest between representatives of the Thief River Falls, Red Lake Falls, St. Hilaire, Lancaster, Holt and Goodridge high schools held at Thief River last Friday evening, Miss Blanche Robson of this village carried off first honors. In addition to winning the local girl's medal and landing top place at Thief River, Miss Robson won the honor of representing the county and district in the Red River Valley declamatory contest which will be held in connection with the Winter Show at Crookston next week. Miss Robson's many friends and schoolmates rejoice with her over honors attained, and feel confident of adding further laurels at the Winter Show.

Mrs. M. Bjerk and Mrs. O. Haugen were at Thief River between trains, Monday.

O. F. Post was a visitor at the Melberg farm home north of Thief River yesterday.

Locals Win At Middle River

The St. Hilaire high school basketball quint romped home at the winning end of a 24 to 11 score game at Middle River last Friday evening. The team which was accompanied by Coach E. O. Burkee, was composed of the following: Hazen Walten center, Nels Nelson and Sigurd Engh forwards, Leo King and Melvin Shervá, guards. Harvey Olsen played forward position as substitute. The boys had a fine time at Middle River and are loud in their praises of the hospitality of the good people of that hustling burg. A return game will be played between the same teams here next Friday evening.

Secret Is Out

St. Hilaire has the reputation of numbering among it's residents more heavy set, not to mention fat, men than any other town in this part of the state. Many have speculated as to the reason for it but nothing plausible has been advanced until today when Nels Benoit stated it was because they used Mascot Flour. Maybe he is right. At least his shape proves it in his case.

Two Games Scheduled

The Newfolden high school basketball quint, reputed to be one of the fastest school teams in this part of the state, will clash with the St. Hilaire high on local floor tonight (Thursday). There will be some real sport for lovers of basketball at this game. The following evening Middle River high comes here for their return game. As the boys have gone to considerable expense to bring these teams here, they desire as good attendance as possible and have made very attractive admission prices.

Kirby Wins Out

"Dr" S. Kirby who was arrested at Northwood, N. D., charged with practicing medicine without a North Dakota license, is reported to have won out at the trial which was held at Grand Forks Tuesday.

BOY BURNS UP MOTORBOAT

Heard Mother Objecting to Father Taking Ride in Craft, So He Destroyed It.

Philadelphia.—The mystery of the burning of the powerboat Susan G. at Camden has been cleared up by the confession of Ernest Gries, Jr., seventeen years old.

The youth told the police he burned the boat to please his mother. He told of lying on the lounge in the sitting room of his home while his mother and father were arguing over a trip the father wanted to take on the craft with a boat club over the holiday. Mrs. Gries did not want her husband to go.

The boy said he told his mother he would burn the boat, and so, early in the morning he went aboard in his canoe, soaked everything with gasoline from the tank, set it on fire and was blown overboard. He swam ashore, he said, and went to bed.

FLIES 300 MILES AN HOUR

Monoplane Invented by Italian Engineer Said to Need Little Landing Space.

Rome, Italy.—An airplane capable of landing without the need of a large aviation field, able to travel more than 300 miles an hour and, if necessary, to meander along at only a few miles an hour is announced as the invention of an Italian engineer, Epaminonda Bertucci of Rome.

The inventor reports that he has already tried out the machine on a small scale and regards his first experiments as indicative of the success of the invention. The new machine is primarily intended for aerial war chasing and is to be armed with a machine gun. It is a monoplane.

MATHEMATICS OF BAD ROADS

Farmer Solves Problem of Hours Lost in Making Trip Over Road That Is Deep in Mud.

If it takes a farmer, making a trip through the mud one hour and a half longer than when the roads are firm, how many hours are lost in a year if 1,000 farmers make an average of 12 trips a month? What would be the monetary loss if each 1½ hours lost be estimated at 75 cents per hour for each man and his team? This "two-in-one" proposition gave our old cat considerable trouble, but he finally worked it out thus: One farmer multiplied by 1½ hours multiplied by 12 trips, multiplied by 1,000 farmers, multiplied by 12 months equals 216,000 hours lost; going a step further, and multiplying 216,000 by 75 cents, you have $162,000 per annum lost to the farmers. Our old cat is now pondering how many road bonds this annual loss would float at 5 per cent interest.—Union Times.

SETS ARMY HIKING RECORD

Private John McGregor Makes 500 Miles in Fourteen Days With Full Pack.

Washington.—An endurance test has been completed by Private John McGregor of the Second division, believed by veteran infantrymen here to establish a new record for long-distance hiking with full pack for the army.

Major General Harbold, executive assistant to General Pershing, chief of staff, issued the official reports of McGregor's feat showing that he covered the last 500 miles of the march in 14 days, an average of more than 35 miles a day. The entire distance covered was 1,100 miles, from San Antonio, Tex., to Denver, Colo., and was made in 40 marching days.

Cause of Earth's Fragrance.

The real cause of the peculiar fragrance of the earth, which is noticeable especially in the spring and after rains, has been found by recent experimenters. It was formerly explained as a result of certain chemical decompositions, but has now been discovered to be the emanation of thread bacteria, of which two species are particularly odorous. Not only do the bacteria isolated from the soil have the earth fragrance, but they retain it when cultivated on very varied substances, even on such inorganic materials as pea soup, milk, glycerine and starch paste.

MILLION IN MEXICAN CAPITAL

Population of City Is Estimated to Be Twice That of Ten Years Ago.

Mexico City, Mex.—The population of Mexico City has increased more than 100 per cent during the last ten years, according to recent estimates based on statistics, which fix the figure at approximately 1,000,000. This is far above the normal increase and the influx of persons is attributed as due to revolts. Housing conditions, as a result, are bad, and suitable dwellings are at a premium.

BETSY'S CHANCE.

By MOLLIE MATHER.

Copyright, 1921, Western Newspaper Union.

Betsy served coffee at Mrs. Tabor's select table, and though the day was so hot that Betsy's hair twisted in moist curls on her forehead, the girl's eyes had a merry light as though her task were part of some humorous game. The aristocratic appearing old gentleman at the head of the table looked up with a sympathetic smile, as Betsy bent over him.

The cheer of her contenance was in refreshing contrast to the petulant or bored expressions of the other guests.

"Well," asked the old man in the low tone which only she might hear, "who are you today? A happy hostess serving refreshment at one of her own entertainments? Or just a little sister of mercy dispensing good?" Mrs. Tabor did not allow her maids to converse with her guests, but the aristocratic old gentleman was a privileged person.

"I am," Betsy smilingly whispered, "acting a famous dining room scene where a society princess goes disguised as a waitress," The old gentleman laughed enjoyably.

"I knew it," he exclaimed, "Upon my dresser—did you tidy my room this morning, Betsy?—I left a book for you. 'Little Songs and Impersonations.' Thought you'd enjoy it—"

"Betsy!" said Mrs. Tabor coldly.

Later she complained to the old gentleman.

He came upon Betsy just before afternoon tea was to be served on the lawn of Tabor House. She was reading his book and singing over it.

"If you could have studied," asked the old gentleman, "what would you have liked most to be?"

"A musician," the girl answered promptly, ' "a singer," her eyes glowed.

Mr. Humphrey took a ticket from his pocket. "The hotel entertainer who condescends to amuse us this evening at Tabor House gave me this," he said. "I believe that he is supposed to both play and impersonate in song. I prefer to remain this evening in my room with my papers. Won't you take the ticket of invitation and go, Betsy?"

"I'd love to," the girl eagerly cried, then her brightness vanished. "But Mrs. Tabor would object."

The old man flecked the geraniums impatiently. "You might at least listen from an upper hall," he suggested.

So when the downstairs lights were brilliant, when the noted tenor's voice came to her there high in her corner, Betsy, the little waitress, listened, thrilled. And next day the old man discovered her repeating the program in the big lower deserted room while dust mops lay idly upon the floor.

"Betsy," asked the old gentleman gravely, "what will you choose for your vocation in life? You cannot go on in this way, you know, with just teacups and dusters."

As he spoke both turned to find the young entertainer standing inside the doorway. He had evidently been there unobserved for some time.

"Teacups and dusters!" he repeated, "while your remarkable talent lies dormant?"

"You think," the older man asked quickly, "that Miss Blair would be able to make good at music?"

"I think," the musician enthusiastically declared, "that she is a find."

Betsy fled from the room, all joyously embarrassed, but the two remained discussing her promise. When she came to speak to her old friend some days later, the girl's eyes were wide with visions and she spoke as one unable to believe the wonder of her own words.

"This Mr. Morris Bernard," she explained, "is going to make it possible for me to study for a career. There is a fund, he tells me, placed in his own music master's care, for instructing pupils of promise. That money may be expended on my education. Through Mr. Bernard I have been the fortunate pupil selected. When my concert engagements become reality then I may restore that fund for the benefit of another. Is it not wonderful, this, my golden opportunity?"

So little Betsy went far to the great city, across the great ocean. And the old man, growing ever older but never less kindly, stayed on at the Tabor House.

From across the waters came word of the girl's assured success, little clippings from papers which she proudly sent him. But her letters in answer to his interested inquiries seemed ever to carry a vein of sadness.

"Our musician," she wrote at last, "you remember Morris Bernard? Well, he has loved me always, it seems, since that first day. While I—my heart must have flown to meet his that night, as his voice came to me there on the stair. But he has deceived me, and I cannot marry him. The money donated for my education came not from an established fund, the great master confidentally admits, but was merely a personal gift from one interested. So until I can pay back all that Morris Bernard deceivingly gave, he must suffer, unknowing my refusal to marry him."

Betsy's old friend did not wait to answer that letter. He sent a telegram instead.

"It was I who donated that money," he stated. "It was my one satisfying pleasure. I ask but one reward: That you will come with your husband to sing for me."

And Betsy wired: "Coming as soon as Morris can be made my husband."

WIN ONE OF OUR FREE PRIZES

Here is a chance for you to win either a fine $25.00 gold watch, $5.00 in trade or $2.50 in trade. The plan is simplicity itself: We have filled one of our famous "HOME BRAND" catchup bottles with peas and sealed it. Every purchase of $1.00 will be entitled to one guess at the number of peas in the bottle. Guesses will be given on all payments made on account, and also where farm produce is taken in exchange. No limit to number of guesses. One is given with every dollar sale as above stated.

Contest opens Feb. 1st and ends May 1st. On last named date bottle will be opened and contents counted by disinterested parties. Customer having either correct number or closest to it, wins the watch. In case of tie, the first number shown in our "guess book" wins. The same rule applies to both trade prizes.

Bring your next grocery or meat order to us. You may guess the lucky number and win the watch or one of the other prizes. Buy one of the Home Brand catchup bottles, fill it with peas and see how close you can come to the correct number.

COCKATOO KILLS BIG ROOSTER

Bird, at Outs With Barnyard Fowl, Wins Battle at Martinez, Cal.

Martinez, Cal.—A bitter battle was fought at the home of B. F. Rhine, local merchant, by a two-pound cockatoo and an eight-pound rooster.

The diminutive cockatoo proved that weight does not always prevail, for after taking a severe grueling for almost five minutes he grabbed the rooster in the windpipe with his sharp beak, administering the death blow.

According to Rhine, the pair had been at outs for several weeks. One morning the cockatoo was perched on a bush in the back yard when the rooster spied him. The heavyweight barnyard champion made a rush at his smaller enemy, spurs and beak.

The cockatoo, however, dug his claws into the rooster's breast, and pulling himself upright administered the death blow.

Get Many Silly Complaints.

Every day the postmasters in the larger cities receive countless letters of complaint. Not unnaturally among so large a number there are many of a frivolous nature. For example, one woman wrote that the carrier who delivered her letters was engaged to a woman twice his own age, and requested that he should be asked to break off the engagement or be dismissed.

WHEN DIPLOMAT GOT EVEN

Chinese Minister Waited, but Scored Effectively When the Right Time Came.

In a London club, when the Chinese minister happened to be present, a rather tactless speaker referred to the position of women in China and how they were debarred from so many of the privileges of men. He meant no ill, but what he said was indiscreet and led to a moment's embarrassing silence, after which the conversation was resumed on other subjects.

The minister did not speak for a while, but presently, during a pause, he turned to the man who had made the critical remark:

"This is a very beautiful club you have here, sir."

"Yes, I believe it is the finest."

"Much finer than your ordinary private houses?"

"Certainly. None of our private houses is as large and beautiful as this," was the response.

"I suppose you have your women here—your mothers and sisters and wives and daughters. Of course, you must have them here to enjoy your beautiful house with you."

"Why, no. It is against the rules. They are not allowed here at all."

"Why not?" said the minister.

And the clubman saw the point. —From the Sunday at Home.

Oldest Dwelling in England.

The oldest dwelling in England is not a castle, but a public house, the "Fighting Cocks" at St. Albans, which is said to have been built as a boathouse to the monastery founded at St. Albans by King Offa, about 795, and to have become an inn in 1250. It is octagonal in shape and its ceilings are less than six feet high.

The basketball team has scheduled two games for this week. Newfolden will be here to-night and Middle River will be here tomorrow night. Be sure to be present at both games.

Virigl and Arthur inform us that they are going into the manufacture of furniture, library tables a specialty. It is understood that Clifford will be superintendent of the concern.

Blanche Robson who represented our high school at the declamatory contest at Thief River last Friday, captured first place, which means that she will compete in the Red River Valley contest at Crookston.

Thursday morning during assembly period, a program consisting of four parts was given. The first part was devoted to singing; the second to essay readings by Alice Fricker, Anna Hallameck and Howard Bilden. The third part was given to "pep" practice and the last was taken up in presenting medals to the winners of the Declamatory contest.

The program was thoroughly enjoyed by all, and the suggestion that each class give programs at different times, met with favor.

Abusing our school building and the fixtures by writing or marring same in any way shows a lack of appreciation of what we have. When visitors come to our school they notice more than we do ourselves just how it appears. If they should see writing on the class room chairs they would draw conclusions that we lack either manners or common sense. A few "don'ts" observed by all would do a lot toward keeping our school in the appearance we all want it to be.

DON'T write on the desks or walls, —practice penmanship at home.

DON'T mar the fixtures—you would not if it were yours.

DONT' leave chalk on the floor,—pick it up

DON'T throw things about the rooms,—there's lots of room outside.

DON'T leave paper scattered about —practice neatness.

DONT think the building was made for you alone,—it was not.

THE STORY

By JACK LAWTON.

Copyright, 1921, Western Newspaper Union.

Hope heard of Charles Thorpe the very day of her arrival at Kane Mills. The leading man of the manufacturing settlement hastened to complain to her father concerning this employee.

"Thorpe is a dangerous fellow," Fielding said. "We ought to get rid of him. That temper of his is bound to get himself and others into trouble, while his recklessness is beyond reason.

"'Roughneck' is what the men call him, and he appears to enjoy the name."

Hope's father was the founder of Kane Mills and upon this trip of investigation, she had begged to accompany him.

Lester Kane, while a man of many business interests, had little home affection, but Hope went with him to the unaccustomed world of labor and hardness. For these strong men, of whom Kane Mills community was chiefly composed, were rough citizens, aggressive in their contempt of the fineness that accompanies success.

It was a foreign atmosphere to Hope, but an interesting one. The contempt she ingored, and the achievement admired. Fielding, the smoothly superior, was her one aversion.

"Fielding will drive you about and look after you," her father ordered, "while I am occupied. As your woman's curiosity had to be satisfied by this trip, you must now make the best of it."

It was Thorpe, the "Roughneck," who attracted her most.

When he looked up at Hope unexpectedly one day and flashed her a smile of warm friendliness, the girl stared her astonishment.

When Fielding's car refused to be moved from its stand in the roadway it was Thorpe who respectfully and obligingly came to the rescue.

"What," she asked her father later, "do you know about Charles Thorpe?" Her father regarded her keenly.

"Nothing," he replied, "to his advantage. The less you know of him the better."

The day after that Hope found a letter. It was lying on the ground in the favorite woodsy nook that she frequented. And thinking it to be one she had dropped the preceding day, Hope read its opening sentence.

"Dear Budsy," began the note in tremulous lettering, "I miss you, son. And every night I light the lamp and sing the song we used to sing together. Do you remember dearie?—before sin carried you out of my care.

"'You'll be coming back again to me,
As brave and as true as you used to be—'"

"Sometimes I think if the heart of my song could reach you, son, you would gain courage to come back—to mother."

Sudden tears filled Hope's soft eyes.

"Budsy!" she whispered, "Budsy!" She was thinking of that other name the man gave him, the name he accepted in laughing bravado.

Hearing a violin one evening sending its melody out on the air, Hope learned that Charles Thorpe was the musician and searched him out the following morning in his factory, begging the loan of some music.

"It is lonely here," she told him, "and I thought that if you had any music I'd like to try it on the piano." So Hope came upon his mother's song. It was very sweet—"The heart of my song," the desolated mother had written, so Hope, in her sympathetic reading, found that tender chord. In her little room of the crude hotel she heard that night sounds of disturbance in the long room below. Tables were pushed back roughly, once a woman screamed. Hope's father had not yet come to his adjoining room, so the girl crept fearfully down the stairs.

"Keep back," the hotelkeeper's wife warned her.

"You'll not want to see. It's the Roughneck in a rage. Fielding tonight is going to get his. No one can interfere. When Thorpe is like that he goes wild. Fielding deserves it. He hasn't been honest with the men. So Roughneck is out for them. But—oh—" finished the woman, and rushed from the room.

Hope saw two men facing each other, white and desperate. Then Fielding cowered suddenly, slunk back, Thorpe following him mercilessly.

Sharply the girl called out. He did not hear. Then, "Budsy," she cried, "oh, Budsy!"

Fiercely, angrily he whirled around, but Hope was now in the next room at the piano. The song came softly, vibrantly, seeming strangely out of place. Charles Thorpe faltered, listened, turned quietly and made his way past the tense excited faces. Before the piano he stood trembling; questioning dark eyes looking down upon the girl. When her song was done Hope met his eyes.

"Budsy," she said gently, decisively, "you are going home."

"Yes," he answered, "yes—"

Tentatively his big hand went out to her.

"If you will promise that I may see you again when—"

"When—" Hope gravely quoted, "you are as brave and as true as you used to be."

From the room beyond came sounds of merriment, the averted tragedy, an incident already forgotten. Serious, purposeful, Charles Thorpe stood in the doorway.

"Until then," he said, "good-night."

CREAMERY HOLDS ANNUAL MEETING

Fine Attendance Monday When New Officers Are Elected For Coming Year

The annual meeting of stockholders and patrons of the St. Hilaire Cooperative Creamery Association held at the village hall last Monday afternoon was marked by the best attendance of any meeting held in later years. Report of the secretary read at the meeting shows the creamery to be doing a very satisfactory business. Considering the price received for butter in 1921, as compared to some of the previous years, last years business was about as good as any since the association was first oragnized; it totaling nearly one hundred thousand dollars for the year.

Thanks to the efforts of its officers, who expended much time and effort to bring it about, the association now has a building and equipment equal to anything in this part of the state with which to handle future business which is expected will increase now that they have such splendid facilities for handling it.

In the election of officers Ed. Aubol succeeds J. S. Roy as president and John Maakerud replaces O. L. Larson as vice-president, otherwise there were no changes.

The report of secretary F. S. Erdmann, which appears in this issue, shows that the new building and equipment costs $20,730.40. To enable the buttermaker to pastuerize, it was resolved at the meeting to change the time for cream hauling from 4 to 3 p. m., during regular days in the winter, and to take cream up to 2 p. m. of each day six days a week from April 15 to October 1st.

H. S. Takes Two Games

The St. Hilaire basketball quint added two more victories to their string last week when they defeated Newfolden on Thursday evening by a score of 10 to 4, and Middle River the following evening by 25 to 2. The Newfolden lads, fresh from Thief River where they lost to the high school there by one point, put up a fine exhibition. They played a strong, clean game thruout but were defeated by superior team work on part of the locals.

The game with Middle River was not as one-sided as the score would indicate. They put up a stiff battle and for a time it looked as though they would give the locals a close rub. Considering that the St. Hilaire team outweighed Middle River two to one, and also had the advantage of longer experience at the game, the outcome was not unexpected. However, the Middle River boys showed true sportsmanship and are entitled to credit for putting up a real battle against heavy odds.

Groundhog Day

Last Thursday was, according to tradition, the day when the groundhog came out of his winter quarters to decide whether or not an early spring was in prospect. If he did come out in this part of the country, his hole was snowed full before he had a chance to re-enter, so we are assured an early spring—along about April first.

Mrs. Olaf Nelson Dies

This community was shocked Monday to learn that Mrs. Olaf Nelson had passed away at the German hospital at Minneapolis. Very few local people were even aware that she was ill. Cause of death is given as a form of meningitis and the illness preceeding it was of short duration.

Mrs. Nelson, who was formerly Miss Cora Just, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Emil Just of this village, was born on Sept. 23, 1896 and was only a little over 25 years of age at the time of death. She grew to womanhood in this community and was united in marriage to Mr. Nelson on July 7, 1919. They made this village their home until last year when they moved to Minneapolis where they have since resided. Loss of his loyal helpmate at the very beginning of life's long and weary road is a sad blow to Mr. Nelson and the heartfelt sympathy of this community is extended to him as well as the immediate relatives in their time of sorrow

Besides her husband and parents, Mrs. Nelson is survived by four sisters and one brother, Mrs. Steele of Red Lake Falls, Mrs. Oscar Carlson of this village, Mrs. H. Stensrud of Fargo, another sister at Austin, and a brother, Harry, at home.

The remains, accompanied by the bereaved husband, arrived here yesterday and funeral services will take place from the Just home at 1:30 and at the Swedish Lutheran church at 2:00 today.

REDUCTION IN MACHINE PRICES

State Makes Substantial Slash In Price Of Prison Machinery.

Prices of farm machinery to be put on the market this year by the Minnesota State prison have been slashed $400,000. to meet demands by the farmers through the Minnesota Farm Bureau federation. The state board of control, following conferences with the new farm bureau leaders, reduced market prices 15 to more than 25 per cent on farm machinery made at Stillwater. Reductions on binders amount to nearly $50 on a single machine, the state federation says in an official report prepared for the county farm bureaus. One of the first acts of the new farm bureau administration was to urge the board of control to bring machinery prices down. As a result of the reduction which followed this demand, the executive board of the state federation, in session last week, passed a resolution urging all farmers who are planning to purchase machinery to buy it from the prison plant

LINCOLN FORESAW POSSIBLE DANGER

URGED NECESSITY FOR RESPECT FOR LAW AND ORDER

Words of the Great Emancipator Especially Significant in the Turmoil of the World Today.

In his first great patriotic speech, now too little known, Abraham Lincoln forecast many of the present day political and social conditions. The theme of this speech was the danger to American institutions that would come from within and the need for a greater respect for law and order.

"In the great journal of things happening under the sun," said Mr. Lincoln, "we, the American people, find our account running the date of the Nineteenth century of the Christian era. We find ourselves in the peaceful possession of the fairest portion of the earth as regards extent of territory, fertility of soil and salubrity of climate. We find ourselves under the government of a system of political institutions conducing more essentially to the ends of civil and religious liberty than any of which the history of former times tells us.

"We, when mounting the stage of existence, found ourselves the legal inheritors of these fundamental blessings. We toiled not in the acquirement or establishment of them, they are a legacy bequeathed to us by once a hardy, brave, and patriotic, but now lamented and departed, race of our ancestors. Theirs was the task (and nobly they performed it) to possess themselves, and through themselves us, of this goodly land, and to uprear upon its hills and its valleys a political edifice of liberty and equal rights; 'tis ours only to transmit these—the former unprofaned by the foot of an invader, the latter undecayed by the lapse of time and untorn by usurpation—to the latest generation that fate shall permit the world to know. This task of gratitude to our fathers, justice to ourselves, duty to posterity and love for our species in general all imperatively require us faithfully to perform.

"How, then, shall we perform it? At what point shall we expect the approach of danger? By what means shall we fortify against it? Shall we expect some transatlantic military giant to step the ocean and crush us at a blow? Never!

"All the armies of Europe, Asia, and Africa combined, with all the treasure of the earth (our own excepted) in their military chest, with a Bonaparte for a commander, could not by force take a drink from the Ohio or make a track on the Blue ridge in a trial of a thousand years.

"At what point is the approach of danger to be expected? I answer, if it ever reaches us it must spring up amongst us; it cannot come from abroad. If destruction be our lot we must ourselves be its author and finisher. As a nation of free men we must live through all time, or die by suicide."

After giving some examples of the evil effects on the innocent as well as the guilty, which occurred in the operation of mob violences, Mr. Lincoln continued:

"I know the American people are much attached to their government; I know they would suffer much for its sake; I know they would endure evils long and patiently before they would ever think of exchanging it for another—yet, notwithstanding all this, if the laws be continually disregarded and despised, if their rights to be secure in their persons and property are held by no better tenure than the caprice of a mob, the alienation of their affections from the government is the natural consequence, and to that sooner or later it must come.

"Here, then, is one point from which danger must be expected.

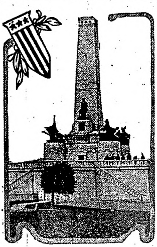
"The question recurs, 'How shall we fortify against it?'

"The answer is simple. Let every American, every lover of liberty, every well-wisher to his posterity swear by the blood of the Revolution never to violate in the least particular the laws of the country, and never to tolerate their violation by others. As the patriots of '76 did to the support of the Declaration of Independence, and so to the support of the Constitution and laws, let every American pledge his life, his property, and his sacred honor—let every man remember that to violate the law is to trample on the blood of his father, and to tear the charter of his own and children's liberty.

"Let reverence for the laws be breathed by every American mother to the lisping babe that prattles on her lap; let it be taught in schools, in seminaries, and in colleges; let it be written in primers, in spelling books, and in almanacs; let it be preached from the pulpit, proclaimed in legislative halls, and enforced in courts of justice. And, in short, let it become the political religion of the nation; and let the old and the young, the rich and poor, the grave and the gay of all sexes and tongues and colors sacrifice unceasingly upon its altars.

"They (the Revolutionary fathers) were pillars of the temple of liberty; and now that they have crumbled away that temple must fall unless we, their descendants, supply their places with other pillars, hewn from the solid quarry of sober reason. Passion has helped us, but can do so no more. It will in future be our enemy. Reason—cold, calculating unimpassioned reason—must furnish all the materials for our future support and defense. Let those materials be molded into general intelligence, sound morality, and, in particular, a reverence for the Constitution and laws; and that we improved to the last, that we remained free to the last, that we revered his name to the last, that during his long sleep we permitted no hostile foot to pass over or desecrate his resting place, shall be that which, to learn, the last trumpet shall awaken our Washington.

"Upon this let the proud fabric of freedom rest, as the rock of its basis; and as truly as it has been said of the only greater institution, 'the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.'"



Lincoln Memorial, Springfield, Illinois.

HAD NO TASTE FOR KILLING

Lincoln Never Was a Hunter in the Sense That the Word Is Generally Used.

"In all the work Abraham took his part," says Ida M. Tarbell in her "Boy Scouts' Life of Lincoln" in Boys' Life. "The ax was put into his hands as soon as they arrived in Indiana, and he was so strong and so willing that he was soon able to swing it with skill. It was only from hunting that he held back. Just before he was eight years old he shot his first turkey—and it was his last. He never shot deer or bear, though he always took part in guarding family and neighbor when there was danger from prowling wolves.

"But if Lincoln did not kill, he did know how to skin and butcher animals. Curing and tanning the hides of the animals they took was almost as important to the family as the meat."

BETWEEN THE LINES

You will not find a sentiment . . .
In this, my Valentine; . .
To put such words on paper seems
To cheapen thoughts divine.

'Tis not the words writ large or bold,
Or even those writ fine . .
That stir the heart the most, 'tis those
That hide between each line.

HAD ORIGIN IN PAGAN FESTIVAL

CUSTOM OF CHOOSING A VALENTINE IS ANCIENT.

Fathers of Christianity Modified the Practices, Which They Were Unable Entirely to Eradicate.

St. Valentine's day is the 14th of February, and singularly ominous to lovers. St. Valentine is said to have been a bishop who suffered martyrdom under the Roman emperor, Claudius, or else under Aurelian in 271.

Like many another semi-Christian custom, the day set apart to the memory of St. Valentine in the Christian calendar is an old pagan festival upon which our ancestors believed that the birds chose their mates for the coming year. This, at least, is the commonly received version of our modern custom of "choosing a valentine" on the 14th of February and of sending a billet-doux or a fancy valentine through the mail to some favored one.

In old Rome, the 15th of February was the festival of Juno Februata (Juno the fructifyer), and the Roman church substituted St. Valentine for the heathen goddess. At that festival, called "Lupercalia," it was there customary, among other ceremonies, to put the names of young women into a box, from which they were drawn by the men as chance directed.

The Christian clergy, finding it difficult or impossible to extirpate the pagan practice, and in accordance with their general principle to eradicate the vestiges of pagan superstition by retaining the ceremonies but modifying their significance, gave it a religious aspect by substituting the names of particular saints for those of women. The saints whose names were drawn were proposed for imitation to the persons who received the slips of paper whereon they were written, and in many religious houses, where this custom still prevails, each member of the community preserves his billet during the year, as an incitement to imitate the virtues and invoke the special intercession of his holy valentine.

This innovation, however, namely, the substitution of the names of saints for the names of lovers, could not please the young people forever. Though the clergy repeatedly forbade the custom of valentines and ordered the use of cards with saints' names, the old pagan custom could not be abolished. The boys and girls triumphed over the saints, and in the end the girls triumphed over the boys, wresting from them their exclusive privilege of choosing mates.

The old custom of drawing names is to this day observed in many parts of England and Scotland in the following manner: A number of clips of paper with the names of an equal number of men and women are shuffled and drawn, so each young man has a valentine in the person of a young maiden, and each maiden draws a young man whom she calls hers. The valentines give each other gifts, and often this little sport ends in love and marriage.

FEBRUARY FOURTEEN

Oh, ware ye all, my maidens fair,
  And ware ye, gentlemen,
For there is danger in the air
  Now Cupid's come again.
Encase your hearts in adamant,
  And guard them round about,
For Cupid is a sly gallant
  And like to draw them out.

Oh, guard ye well, my maidens all,
  And ye, my gentlemen;
Where Cupid's darts are like to fall
  Is always uncertain.
Gird on your armor, strong and true,
  And steel your hearts, and wait,
And be convinced he shoots at you
  Ere you capitulate.

The basket ball team is in hopes of getting a game with Warroad high here sometime this month.

Taking two teams to camp was the feat performed by our baskeball team on Thursday and Friday nights last week. On the first night they defeated the fast Newfolden team by a 10 to 4 score. Both teams played a strong, defensive game, and the visitors were held down to only one field goal while the locals secured five. In Friday's game our team chalked up 25 points to to Middle River's 2. While the later team was out-classed, Middle River can boat of a high school team that are clean players and good losers.

We are informed that our live-wire neighbors, the Eighth Grade, also intend to publish school notes, or we should say, "Boomerangs", as they will name their column "The Boomerang". So we may look forward to—or hear—some booming.

WIN ONE OF OUR FREE PRIZES

Here is a chance for you to win either a fine $25.00 gold watch, $5.00 in trade or $2.50 in trade. The plan is simplicity itself: We have filled one of our famous "HOME BRAND" catchup bottles with peas and sealed it. Every purchase of $1.00 will be entitled to one guess at the number of peas in the bottle. Guesses will be given on all payments made on account, and also where farm produce is taken in exchange. No limit to number of guesses. One is given with every dollar sale as above stated.

Contest opens Feb. 1st and ends May 1st. On last named date bottle will be opened and contents counted by disinterested parties. Customer having either correct number or closest to it, wins the watch. In case of tie, the first number shown in our "guess book" wins. The same rule applies to both trade prizes.

Bring your next grocery or meat order to us. You may guess the lucky number and win the watch or one of the other prizes. Buy one of the Home Brand catchup bottles, fill it with peas and see how close you can come to the correct number.

BARLEY STANDARD OF WEIGHT

Measurements That Today Seem Odd Were Established in England by King Henry III.

Parliament, during the reign of Henry III, established standards of length and weight with actual grains of wheat and barley as a basis. Three barley corns were an inch, and from that was built up our table of inches, feet, ells (yards), perch and acre. One restriction was that the barley corn must be dry and taken from the middle of the ear and laid end to end.

Under the same system, it is recorded, 30 grains of wheat made a penny-weight, and from that as a basis they worked out the Troy pound' in which 12 ounces still make a pound. Originally the sizes of shoes were based upon grains of barley, and it is said that these are the same today as in the early days. There were 13 grains of barley to each size.

"Furlong" is an old English word meaning "furrow long," and is based upon the length a furrow would be in a square ten-acre field.

Awkward.

The teacher, noticing one of his pupils idle, said: "Tommy, come down here and work at your arithmetic. Don't you know that the devil always finds something for idle hands to do?"—Cork Examiner.

Brazilians Named Hammock.

Hammocks are supposed to have received their name from the fact that the natives of Brazil used the bark of the hamack tree for nets in which to sleep.

Last Lyceum Number

The Carolina Concert Company will appear here Monday, March 6, as the last number of this season's lyceum course. The number originally contracted for was the Billy Williams Company but they are unable to fill their date owing to illness of one member of the troupe. The Carolina Concert Company will present a high class program of musical numbers, and will be well worth hearing.

Mother Dies

Albert Kolp returned home Tuesday from his boyhood home at Walnut Ill. where he was called some time ago by the illness of his mother who formerly resided here. "Grandma" Kolp, as she was known while a resident here, died on Jan. 21st at the ripe age of 78 years. Albert of this village, and Elmer who resides near Hazel, besides five other children, were present at the funeral.

Court Opens Feb. 17th

Opening of the spring term of district court in this county, which was delayed by illness of Judge Grindeland, will be on Feb. 17, unless further postponement will be found necessary.

Basketball Friday

A basketball game between a Thief River Falls city team and the local city team will be played at the gym next Friday evening There will be plenty of action in this game, and spectators will be assured their money's worth.

Due to the mishap to the boiler in the power house at Red Lake there was no light or power at this end of the high line either Friday or Saturday nights. Lack of juice necessitated postponement of the basket ball game Friday night and also show at the Imperial hall on Saturday evening.

Announce Engagement

Local friends of Miss Julena Peterson, formerly of this place and now of Los Angeles, Calif, have received announcement of her engagement. The following from the Los Angeles Express gives further particulars: "The engagement of Miss Julena M. Peterson of Chicago, to Earnest Nelson of this city, was announced at a dinner given in their honor at the Paulais Hotel Tuesday evening, Jan. 21st. The wedding is to take place the early part of the summer. Mr. Nelson is a prominent young business man of Los Angeles. Miss Peterson has already become very popular among the young set of the city. Both are well known socially."

Connect With Prizes

This section was fairly well represented at the Winter Show held at Crookston last week. Jim Dresland and Jake Bohlen each had down some of their choice hogs, and we are told L. Westphal exhibited some of his best corn. Lacking a list of winners, we are unable to state what prizes each captured, but we understand they garnered quite a number of first ribbons and other prizes.

Estimate Cost

A meeting was held at the lumber office Sunday to discuss plans for building a new village hall the coming spring. As soon as an estimate of probable cost has been secured for different sizes and types of buildings. further consideration will be given the matter.

Hurt In Accident

Wendell, the youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. N. Beebe, is minus the tip of his thumb and has a badly lacerated hand as the result of an accident while assisting in sawing wood with a power saw last Saturday at the Beebe farm. Dr Bjerken dressed the injured member and it is healing in good shape.

The annual statement of the village will be published next issue. The village is in better shape financially now than it has been for many years.

"Conditions unsettled" is the cry everywhere. Make yourself secure by taking a course in the Mankato Commercial College, Mankato, Minn. Send for free catalog.

Walter Holmstrom left Saturday to attend the Hardware and Furniture Dealer's convention being held in Minneapolis; He intends to look up a few prospective locations while away.

Roads are reported badly drifted in many places since the storm last Friday.

Ice cutting on the river is nearing an end. About all ice houses in town have been filled.

More cordwood, both dry and green, has been hauled into this village during the present winter than for many years past.

Newspaper Consumption.

If all the daily newspapers in the United States were cut into strips of paper as wide as the regular daily paper they would form a ribbon 40,000,000 miles long or more than half the distance to the sun. These same newspapers would also make a strip two feet wide belting the world 16,000 times.—The Thrift Magazine.

Grain Prices Jump

Grain prices have taken a sudden upward trend lately. Tuesday wheat came up over five cents in one jump, Number one Northern, which is the grade usually marketed here, is now $1.36 on local market. Durum is listed at $1.13, rye at .87, and flax at $2.34 Cattle and hog prices are also on the up grade which causes no hard feelings in this locality.

Rough Weather

Last Friday was the roughest day experienced thus far this winter. A strong wind from northwest coupled with drifting snow, made it almost impossible for anyone to be out. Several farmers from northwest who came in with cream early in the day were obliged to spend the night in town.

Special Train Tonight

A special train has been arranged for on this line this evening on occasion of the basket ball game between the Thief River and Crookston city teams. The train, which will carry the Crookston team and a large number of rooters from that city, will stop at Red Lake Falls and St. Hilaire to enable people from those towns to attend the game. The train will leave here at about 7:15 and will leave Thief River after the game at about 10:30. Crookson won the first game played with Thief River, and the latter are bent on landing this one if there is any way to do it.

1921 (Norweigian Excursion)

The Merchant State Bank, agents for the Cunard Steam-ship Company, has secured the movie film of the Norwegian excursion which was conducted by the Cunard Line in 1921. This film will be run next Saturday and Sunday evenings in connection with the regular show at the Imperial Hall.

Besides showing the ship Aquitania which is 901 feet long, 97 feet wide and 92 feet deep, the various places of interest in Norway will be shown as visited by the party making up the excursion of 1921.

The Cunard Company have made arrangements to conduct another excursion to Norway the coming summer and are making very attractive rates to those who may be interested. Booklets, rates and other information may be secured from the local agents.

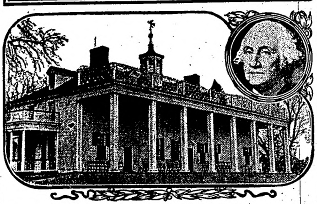
Historic Mount Vernon



REAL WASHINGTON INTENSELY HUMAN

BY NO MEANS THE DEMIGOD HE HAS BEEN DEPICTED.

Admittedly of Violent Temper, but With Strong Powers of Self-Control—Naturally Melancholy.

The Father of His Country would hardly have fancied himself in the role of a demigod—as folks nowadays are disposed to regard him. He was very human.

When a young man, his hair was decidedly red. At the age of fifty he was quite gray, and on occasions of ceremony his locks (done up in a queue) were freely powdered, as was the custom of the day.

His teeth from early manhood gave him a great deal of trouble. They were, in fact, badly decayed—dentistry at that period being an undeveloped art—and this circumstance rather marred his good looks when he smiled or laughed.

He was also considerably pockmarked, having suffered an attack of smallpox at nineteen years of age, while in Barbados with his invalid brother. Those were days when most people had smallpox sooner or later, vaccination being as yet unthought of.

At fifty-seven (when inaugurated as President in New York), he had lost nearly all of his teeth. He then wore a false set of hippopotamus ivory, which made him very uncomfortable. In sitting for his most famous portrait, painted by Gilbert Stuart, his lips were padded out with a wad of cotton.

He seems to have had little sense of humor, and unquestionably was of a most melancholy temperament. The dinners he gave in New York were described by his guests as dull affairs. As a rule, he sat silent, rather sad of visage, and taking little part in the conversation. While others talked, he would keep tap-tapping on the table-edge with fork or spoon—a curious habit he had.

He had a pronounced weakness for gambling—though always held in check by a reluctance to commit himself imprudently. A born speculator, he was constantly engaged in land deals. He subscribed to every lottery and raffle that came along, and would spend many hours at a stretch with a pack of cards, though usually a loser. To attend and bet on a horse race, he often went to Annapolis, or even as far as Philadelphia.

Spelling was by no means his forte. To the end of his life he wrote "winder" for window, "latten" for Latin, etc. Nor is this surprising, inasmuch as his education was finished in a village school. The style of his penmanship, so neat and clear, followed the stereotyped copies of the "Young Man's Companion," which was the guide of his boyhood.

At Mount Vernon he had a very decent collection of books, but his reading seems to have been restricted mainly to works on farming and military science. How he managed to evolve the classic literary style that marks his public and private writings is a puzzle not easy to solve.

The discussion here attempted, however, is not of Washington's many perfections, but of his human weaknesses—to show that, like the rest of us, he was far from godlike. This most admirable of men had certainly a terrific temper. He could swear on occasions with alarming emphasis. A story, well authenticated, is that he pitilessly beat an Alexandria butcher with a horsewhip because the meat-merchant had exposed for sale a deer that was recognized by the master of Mount Vernon as killed on his own plantation.

In 1759, a few months after his marriage, he wrote: "I am now, I believe, fixed at this seat, with an agreeable partner for life; and I hope to find more happiness in retirement than I have ever experienced amidst the wide and bustling world."

Note, if you please, that Washington was then only twenty-seven years old. Yet his attitude of mind was elderly, with a touch of sadness.

On his return to Mount Vernon, after the war, he wrote to Lafayette: "I called to mind that I was now descending the hill I had been fifty-two years in climbing, and that, though blessed with a good constitution, I was of a short-lived family, and might soon expect to be entombed in the mansion of my fathers. But I will not repine. I have had my day."

Think of writing in such terms at fifty-two years of age!—a time of life at which men nowadays consider that they have barely reached their heyday. Washington, as a matter of fact, had still fifteen years to live, eight of which were to be spent in administering the affairs of the nation as its President.

But he was always a melanchly man. For many years before his death the prospect of his departure from this world seems to have been constantly in his mind. Whence, presumably, the great interest he took in the removal of the old family burial vault at Mount Vernon, which was being undermined by an underground stream.

America's Predominant Figure.

One hundred and ninety years have elapsed since George Washington was born. One hundred and twenty-three years have elapsed since he died. He never saw a railway locomotive, a steamboat or an electric light. But he still lives as the predominant figure of American history and the annals of American statesmanship record no state paper that even approximately compares with his farewell address.

A New Hall Needed

Large attendance at basketball games lately has demonstrated that this village is in urgent need of a larger place for such gatherings. The village hall is in a sad state of repair, and will soon have to be replaced by a more modern building. The time is ripe for a consolidation of various interests that are in need of room. A municipal building large enough so it could be used for a city hall, gymnasium, community club hall and similar purposes would be just the thing. An investigation as to ways and means is being made which may result in a definite plan a little later on.

May Be Candidate

C. L. Hanson of Thief River Falls has been mentioned frequently lately as a probable candidate for state senator from this district, at the coming election. Mr. Hansen has a number of interests that require his time and attention so it is questionable whether he will enter the contest or not, but, if he should consent to be a candidate, he has a number of good points to commend him: He is a versatile public speaker; is well acquainted with the district and its needs; and last but not least, is possessed of a determination to get whatever he goes after. These qualifications are essential to making a successful senator, and Mr. Hansen is blessed with them all. He has made a shining success in his own line of endeavor, and should he enter the race, it would not be for any other reason than to further serve the district in which he has taken no small part in upbuilding since he first embarked in his present line of business over twenty years ago.

Why not get started on those class programs suggested some time ago? Let's see which class is first.

According to signs of the moon and stars and what ancient legends tell us, the "Boomerang" is due to commence booming this week.

He: "Why is it that you are always gone when I call for you?"

Senior Miss: "Oh' just luck!"

A number of high school boys are appearing at school with the latest in spectacles. We just wonder if it is a passing "fad" or if some kind optician advised their use?

A number of boys turned out Thursday afternoon at which time the Glee Club was organized. Under the lead of Miss McGinity the Club is sure to be successful.

Hervey (in the blizzard Friday): "What is it—20 above or 20 below?"
Walter: "Aw. take another guess."

IMAGINE—

Sigurd a politician.

Mollie answering to "Amelia" and Amelia answering to "Mollie."

Blanche whispering.

Nels without Juicy Fruit.

There are some real teachers in the Economics class, we'll say. On Monday last week Prof. Hatcher turned the class over to Vivienne Noavk, Anna Hallemeck, Edith Malmquist, Sylvia Denbart and Francis Soderberg, in turn.

TOO BAD!

The city basket ball team was disappointed (?) Friday night when the inclement weather forced them to give up their hopes of victory over the High School team. We will say, however, that the city team can thank the weather for having saved their scalp.

The debate in the Public Speaking class last Friday was very interesting. The issue was, "Resolved, That the elective system should be adopted in High Schools", with Harvey Olsen, Howard Bilden and Nels Nelson on the affirmative, and Margaret Patterson, Sylvia Denbart and Vivienne Novak on the negative side. The vote, which was left to the class, resulted in a tie but the chairman gave his decision in favor of the affirmative. Other debates will follow.

CLASS MEETINGS

We have noted a tendency on part of some to neglect attending their class meetings which shows a lack of loyalty toward your class. No matter what you are, whether you be a Freshman, Sophomore, Junior or Senior, you should do all you can to make your class the BEST in High School, and it is only by taking an active part in its activities that you can do this. In staying away from meetings you only give a better chance for some other class to get ahead of yours. The class that has the most loyal members is the one that is the most active in high school. affairs.

Get down to business—make YOUR class the best!

GLASS SHIELDS FOR CANDLES

Devised by King Alfred to Assure That the Flame Would Burn Without Fluttering.

The glass sconce for the candle, some antiquarians say, goes back in Saxon England to the time of King Alfred, and his chief reason for using it was not for ornament but to keep the light steady, since he told the passage of time by the distance the taper had burned down—having marks on the candle "chimney" to indicate hours.

In New York today time is not measured with tapers, but tapers are bought with a very definite understanding as to the length of time they will burn. Candlemakers who deal in the heavy hand-dipped wax shrine candles will guarantee great candles that sell for so many dollars to burn about a month—indoors. Out of doors the time they burn depends on the wind and the weather, but generally they will last at least a couple of days.—New York Sun.

EXPLAINS PRESENCE OF HARP

There has been quite a lot of discussion latterly in regard to the Irish harp as we see it on the royal standard. But not so many people are aware why the harp displaced "the crown of Munster" as the heraldic device of Ireland. It was Henry VIII—the first of the monarchs to call himself king of Ireland—who definitely made the change, though no Irish device of any sort appeared on the royal standard itself till the reign of James I. Various guesses have been made as to Henry's motive—one, that the three gold crowns on a blue ground might be mistaken for the pope's triple crown.—Montreal Gazette.

ANOTHER MYSTERY SOLVED

He stood amid the blaze and splendor of his magnificent mansion, and in his hand he held the portrait of a beautiful woman. His face was pale and haggard, his lips moved convulsively.

What was this mystery? Was this the picture of his departed wife? No! Was it the portrait of his dead but dearly remembered daughter? No! What, then, was the cause of his haggard face?

Was it not the same portrait that two minutes ago had fallen from its nail and raised a lump as big as a hen's egg on his head? It was.

TO FIGHT FOREST FIRES

Fire engines, light enough for one man to carry on his back, are being manufactured for the use of forest rangers, according to an illustrated article in the Popular Mechanics Magazine. The complete outfit, including the tank filled with gasoline, weighs only 74 pounds, and will deliver 20 gallons of water a minute through a 1,500-foot hose. The single cylinder gasoline engine is said to be the smallest and lightest fire engine built.

Money In Coconuts.

In the last few years a strong and growing interest has developed in coconut culture in the Philippine islands. Not only are the native planters awakening to the advantages of modern methods, but foreign capital and enterprise see a prosperous future in the industry. It is virtually impossible for the prospective planter to either purchase or lease a bearing coconut grove, but large areas of virgin land are available for new plantations, more especially in the Moro province, where conditions are ideal for coconut culture.

Horseshoes Long In Use.

It is impossible to state definitely when horseshoes were first used. A coin in the British museum, from Tarentum, made about 300 B. C., is supposed to represent a horse being shod. It is not likely, however, that shoeing with iron was at all common in the early part of the Middle ages. William the Conqueror is believed to have introduced the art into Britain. For centuries the art of the shoesmith ranked with that of the scholar and bard in England and France, and even kings practiced the art.

Better Than Water.

An invalid whose mouth becomes dry and parched during the night, or a fever patient, will find that an orange, cut into small pieces and placed within easy reach of the bed so that a piece may be held in the mouth from time to time, will be more beneficial than water. It has the added advantage that a patient can manage the piece of orange more easily than he could a glass of water.

"Rock of Ages, Cleft for Me."

"Rock of Ages," hymn by Augustus Montague Toplady, was first printed in 1775, and has since become one of the most popular of all Christian hymns. It has been translated into over three hundred languages. Toplady was inspired to write the hymn when he found refuge from a thunder storm in a cleft rock. The rock was located in Blagdon parish, England.

THE RIGHT SETTING

By MOLLIE MATHER

Copyright, 1922, Western Newspaper Union.

The elder sister of Janey bewailed her indifference before the family. "She is such a dear sweet soul," said Marion, "that it seems a pity some fine man may not be allowed to appreciate her lovable qualities. Janey shuts up like a gray oyster in masculine presence, withdrawing her charms in the shell. She is provokingly perverse. At dances she will sit meekly bored, while social functions, as a rule, are a weariness to her. But give Janey some good music to play, or a new book to discuss, and she will blossom out in surprising cleverness and feeling. I wonder how she ever got into our light-headed family."

"Janey loves us all," young Mollie said loyally, "but she is different—superior I would call it, like Professor Craythorne. Everyone is wild to have Professor Craythorne at entertainments or banquets, because he is brilliantly interesting."

The married sister sighed. "Well, I'd like to know Janey's proper setting," she said, "and place her in it. She's too pretty a flower to 'waste her sweetness on the desert air.'"

"I", remarked Corrine, "am satisfied to let Janey rest in her oblivion. If it were not for our demure sister's indifference to the average man, I would have no admirers at all. They usually see and come, but it is Janey's affections that they would conquer. And Janey is too busy with her writings and her studies to pay attention to them, so they return humbly grateful to my society. Do you know—".

Corrine sat up laughing, "I am determined to vanquish that new admired professor. His coldness piques me, and he is so good-looking."

Mollie smiled scornfully, "You have got some job before you, Cleopatra." She mocked, "Every girl in college has a crush on Professor Craythorne—to say nothing of many outside. But does he notice them? Nix," ended Mollie expressively.

"You are growing," Corrine remarked, "cruder and more impossible every day. I hope that your mode of slangy conversation is confined to your home."

Marion leaned forward eagerly. "While you two have been quarreling," she said, "I've had an idea. From Mollie's description of the professor it would seem that he and Janey are true congenial souls, and if I could bring about a match between them it would be highly commendable. I intend to try. Nothing could be more natural than that Ned should invite his old friend in to dinner some evening."

Marion put on her hat, preparatory to returning to her own home. "Settled" she said happily.

But though her ambitious plans were easy of attainment, the evening was a failure, at least as far as drawing Janey and the professor together was concerned. Janey, after fulfilling her duties as hostess-assistant, retired upon the entrance of Ned and his friend to the living room into a far corner with a book, while the professor, after several uneasy glances at his watch, murmured something about "an unexpected engagement," and made his adieus. Marion had no sympathy in her discouragment.

"Match-making matrons," remarked Corrine bitterly, "are odious. No wonder the professor fights shy of them."

But Mollie laughed. "The wrong setting," she mischievously explained.

Corrine, a few evenings later, was merrily triumphant, when she returned from an entertainment, with the professor as escort.

"She gets 'em all," said Mollie inelegantly. Marion's disappointment was visible. Corrine's arrogant pride in her own popularity jarred upon her. The elder sister's heart yearned over the small unselfish Janey, absorbed in ambitious study, yet forgetful often of self in thought for others. Indifferent appearing in her aloofness, Janey had a heart of gold, and John Craythorne possessed a man's noble qualities. Surely there was a match which should be "made in Heaven."

Janey was quiet when she came into dinner at evening. She relieved the protesting Mollie as usual of her tasks, and later, shining-eyed, slipped away to her own room.

"In anticipation of reading a new story," Corrine explained.

But it was Mollie who, entering the house some few days after, gave the true key to the situation. "Marion, Corrine," she began excitedly, "you should have seen them, Janey and our professor, sitting there, one upon either side of a reading table in the library. I had to go down for a book and I watched them secretly for some time. They were talking together in whispers and laughing softly. But it was the way they looked into each other's eyes; you could see they had discovered Marion's kindred spirit idea. It's been going on for some time. Janey confessed that they met some time ago, by accident, at that same library table. We will lose Janey soon," Mollie concluded shrewdly, "It was the right setting."

The Main Trouble.

"You should have all your clerks take our course in scientific salesmanship."

"We show them how to seize the psychological moment for closing a sale."

"The main trouble now is that we can't get clerks."

The Eighth Grade Boomerang

The state board exams are beginning to loom on the horizon.

Please give Oscar a remedy for keeping waste paper at home.

There are signs of revolution in the eight grade. I wonder why?

Oscar has been blessed with a "brand" new jacket and Bill with a sweater.

What is that mysterious paper that the seventh grade are passing around??

We wonder why Miss McGinity's desk is moving closer to the 8th grade all the time.

The eighth grade are trying to decide what to do with the extra one cent in their treasury.

The Eighth Grade had a class meeting Tuesday evening. We'll tell 'em it was some meeting,

We have decided on having blue and gold for our class colors. The world will soon see us shine.

In Geography class Miss McGinity asked, "William, do the fish stay here in the winter?', Bill-"No, Mum, they fly south."

Bill Hallameck, champion runner of the state, out-ran Fatty Arbuckle, the former champion of the world, in a 50 mile race. He now has the world championship.

We've puzzled long as to what the "Hi" in Hi-light referred to, because we saw no very "lofty" demonstrations of superior knowledge on the part of our upper classmen. But at last we have the mystery solved It must either refer to their class rooms which are on second floor or else to the extraordinary height of the students up there.

Last week all those who had been selling, Red Cross stamps before Christmas were rewarded for their diligence by recieving tops and pins. Those who had been less industrious recieved pins while those who sold many more recived tops, which have been the teachers plague ever since.

Jurors Discharged

Thru a slight irregularity in drawing the jury list for the winter term of district court in this county it was found necessary to discharge both grand and petit jurors at opening of the term last week. Summons were served on a new list last part of the week. St. Hilaire was represented by five women and three men: Mesdames N. E. Beebe, G. I. Fellman, E. F. Dann, O. Gunstad and J. P. Patton, and the Messers Lars Loberg, Victor Scholin and O. L. Larson, on the grand jury when it met Monday morning. They finished their session which was a short one, Tuesday evening and returned home.

As there are quite a number of cases on the calendar this term, it may last anywhere from three weeks to a month.

Elevator Destroyed

Badger, Feb. 18—Fire of unknown origin destroyed the elevator of the Red Lake Milling Company at Badger last Friday night. The elevator was well filled with grain a large part of which will be a total loss. A car of wheat consigned to the Crookston Milling company, just sealed up and ready to be pulled out, was burned to the tracks, but another car, loaded with corn, was pushed out of danger by the fire department.

The main track of the Great Northern was left in the clear but one side of the elevator fell across the sidetrack and it was some time before the work of clearing could be begun because of the smoke.

Better Times Coming

With Minnesota's big road program for 1922 about to start which means expenditure of millions of dollars in the state; with hundreds of other public improvements contemplated; with the iron mines and lumbering industry commencing preparations for a busy year, and with agriculture setting the stage for a big year there should be no unemployment in Minnesota the coming spring, summer and fall.

School Board Meeting

Regular monthly meeting of the school board was held at the Merchants State Bank last evening. Among other matters taken up was the disposal of the $20,000 bond issue voted some time ago. A representive of an Iowa concern was present to submit a tentive bid for the bonds

Crookston Takes Game

The Crookston basketball team won from Thief River on the latter's floor last Thursday night by a score of 27 to 21. This was the second game played between the two teams this winter, Crookston being the winner in both instances. The Crookston team were accompanied by about 300 ardent fans from their city which number was further augmented by about 40 from Red Lake Falls and 70 from here. A special train carried the team and fans to Thief River and returned after the game. No exceptionally brilliant playing was noted on part of either team but Crookston has a slow consistent method of play, and a husky bunch of players that is mighty hard to beat. The game was free from wrangles and was very interesting to watch.

Have Potato Meeting

Nearly three hundred farmers from the vicinity of Middle River attended a meeting in that enterprising village last Monday which meeting was called for the purpose of discussing the growing and marketing of potatoes. The meeting was held under auspices of the Commercial Club of Middle River which is a live and going organization with nearly sixty members. Prof. McCall of the Northwest School of Agriculture at Crookston and F. W. Smith of Parkers Prairie were the speakers. A free lunch was served to all present after the program was over. No doubt this get-together meeting of business-men and farmers will result in much good in that enterprising community.

The roughest weather experienced here this winter was yesterday and Tuesday. A fall of light, fluffy snow accompanied by a strong wind made things mighty unpleasant. Roads are badly drifted and snow drifts to the height of five and six feet are now a common sight.

Prefers Charge

Thief River Falls, Feb. 18.—Martin Hanson, who was recently arrested on a charge of having carnal knowledge of a female child under 18 years of age, was bound over to the grand jury in the sum of $500. by Judge N. W. Tarrant in municipal court Saturday. The warrant was issued on Oct. 19, 1919, but Hanson had left the city and could not be found. The girl's family, who were formerly residents of Deer Park township, also moved away after the alleged offense was committed, returning only recently. The complaining witness has a child she maintains Hanson is the father. The latter in the meantime married and has a wife and baby.

Lose Young Son

Robert McGinn Jr. son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert McGinn of Thief River, died last Friday after a brief illness. The young man, who was prominent in high school athletics, was taken ill while out on a tour with the Thief River high school basketball team about a month ago and was not well since that time.

Heartfelt sympathy of many St. Hilaire friends is extended to the bereaved family.

Gust Bergh and two sons of Bemidji arrived here Thursday after having visited at Halstad for a few days. The boys will attend school here balance of the present term while staying with their grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Hauge.

The annual statement of receipts and expenditures of the village for the past year is published in this issue. This statement is in detail and shows exactly how and where the village money was spent.

T. R. F. 12–St. Hilaire 6

An independent basketball team from Thief River played the local city team at the gym last Friday night which resulted in victory for the visitors by a score of 12 to 6. As promised beforehand, there was plenty of action. Nothing but the "strangle hold" was barred, and even that was overlooked if not too evident. From viewpoint of an onlooker, it was more fun than a 'barrel of monkeys".

The visitors, entering into the spirit of the contest, gave and took with equal good nature. It was a mighty good exhibition, and the boys will be welcome here at any future time.

Aged Pioneer Dies

Last Saturday marked the passing of another of the old pioneer citizens of this community when Mrs. Kristina Julin passed away at the home of her grandson, Chas. Samuelson, in Wyandotte township. Mrs. Julin was nearly 92 years of age and death is attributed to natural infirmities of old age. She, with her husband, who preceded her in death a number of years ago, first came to Wyandotte over 38 years ago. She is survived by three daughters, Mrs. A. Aug. Erickson, Mrs. Samuelson, in this vicinity, Mrs. Chas. Fellman at Red Lake Falls. and a son, Charles, at Fort Francis. Funeral services will be conducted by Rev. A. F. Nelson from the Clara church tomorrow afternoon.

Fire At Euclid

A fire which originated in the living rooms over the Misner store at Euclid last Saturday morning destroyed that buildng as well as the Burns garage nearby together with contents of both places. It is repored that were it not for the brick bank building acting as a check for the flames, the entire business part of town would have been destroyed. Lack of fire fighting equipment as well as zero weather seriously handicapped the citizens in their fight with the flames.

BELIEVE IN LIFE INSURANCE

About Forty Million Americans Now Hold Policies, According to the Latest Figures.

Approximately 40,000,000 individuals are now life insurance policy holders, according to four separate statistical surveys made recently by the Association of Life Insurance Presidents. In three of the four inquiries the results deal with 90 per cent of the life insurance business in the United States, while in the other case, that of death claims, 55 per cent of the total business is represented.

According to the reports, the people of the United States had in 1921 the healthiest year of their existence; they bought $8,500,000,000 of new life insurance, an amount second in volume only to that purchased in 1920; the proportion of the accumulated borrowings on their life insurance policies is well below the high level reached in 1914, and the assets held as reserves to mature policies are making a substantial growth, contributing further to national development.

FEDERAL IMPEACHMENT

Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, was impeached for usurpation of the law, corrupt use of veto power, etc. At his trial, March 30 to May 26, 1868, he was found not guilty by a vote of 35 to 19. Other impeachments were: William Blount, senator from Tennessee, July 7, 1797—acquitted; John Pickering, judge of the District court of the United States, March 12, 1803—removed from office; Samuel Chase, associate justice—acquitted March 1, 1805; William Humphreys, judge—removed from office June 26, 1862; William K. Belknap, secretary of war, August 1, 1876—acquitted; Charles Swayne, judge—acquitted February 27, 1905; Robert W. Archbald, associate judge—removed from office January 13, 1913. On June 12, 1914, District Judge Alston O. Dayton was impeached, but the proceedings were dropped March 3, 1915.

AFTER-CHRISTMAS INCENSE

Christmas trees that have served their joyful purpose recently have been functioning in another capacity—that of furnishing incense, sometimes in homes, but more often to the great outdoors. In some sections the air of the north woods meets the nostrils of the wayfarer. Its origin is easily traced to a great bonfire of Christmas spruce on the neighboring vacant lot. Some families burn their Christmas trees, a branch at a time, in the heating stove or furnace. The incense goes all through the house and gives a pleasant odor to the rooms.—Detroit News.

AH MOON'S YOUNG MAN

Ah Moon, who as janitor of the chamber of commerce of Oroville, Cal., admitted that he had passed his days of usefulness, said that he would bring in a young man who would be able to fulfill the arduous duties of the position more creditably. Before leaving for the home of his ancestors Ah Moon brought in and introduced his successor who, he said, was only sixty-five years old.

EXPLAINED IN FULL

Lavish use of the word "phenomena" by a colored preacher brought a member of his congregation to him at the close of the service to inquire its meaning.

"What do 'phenomena' mean? Well, Brudder Brown, Ah'll 'splain by tellin' you fust what it ain't.

"Now, ef you comes down de road an' passes a briar patch, dat ain't no phenomena. An' ef you goes on an' sees a cow, dat ain't no phenomena. Den 'sposing you goes a little fudder and hears a mockin' bird a-singin' in de tree, dat ain't no phenomena.

"But, Brudder Brown, ef you comes by a cow a-settin' in a briar patch a-singin' like a mockin' bird, now, dat am a phenomena."

HE HAS PROOF

Some say that men who part their hair on the right side never get anywhere, but you can't convince John W. McCardle, chairman of the Indiana public service commission, that this line of thought is right.

"Why look at those pictures," he said to a friend in his office a few days ago. "There's William McKinley—he parted his hair on the right side and was elected President of the United States. Then there's Warren G. Harding. He is a right-sider.

"And then look at me. Why, I part my hair on the right side, and who knows but that I may be President."—Indianapolis News.

QUITE POSSIBLE

Mrs. Neighbors—They tell me your son is in the college football eleven?

Mrs. Malaprop—Yes, indeed.

Mrs. Neighbors—Do you know what position he plays?

Mrs. Malaprop—Ain't sure, but I think he's one of the drawbacks.

NEEDED A SCOUT

PUNISHMENT TO FIT CRIME

Argentine Has Somewhat Novel Method of Treating Offenders Violating Telegraph Rules.

The Argentinian conception of telegraph crime is, to say the least, rather novel. Thus, if a culprit violates the secrecy of a telegram he is liable to a fine of 1,000 pesos or 12 months' imprisonment. If he stops communication by intentionally interrupting the lines or cutting the wires, he may be called upon to pay 500 pesos or to serve his country without pay for six months. But an attack on or violent resistance to a telegraph officer is apparently a minor act, which can be indulged in at the moderate risk of forfeiting 200 pesos or serving two months in jail.

The Telegraph and Telephone Journal of Great Britain calls attention to this state of affairs, with the comment that, judging from the tone of some of the recent critics of the British government telephone service, these critics would probably go the South American republic one better and offer prizes for assaults on certain prominent officials of the British telephone staff.

EXPLANATION

The eighth grade last week said they were puzzled as to the meaning of "Hi-Light", and it is but proper that they should know. "Hi" then, is taken to mean the high school, and "Light" here means a guiding light shining down on our little neighbors. They imagined that it referred to the "extraordinary height" of the students, but this accounts for the fact that we can look down upon the little ones and ask, without embarrassment, "How is the weather down there?"

So, kind friends, always think of the Hi-Light as THE GUIDING LIGHT that always shines upon you.

C. G. MUGG, the Grand Forks Eye Specialist will be at Kinney's Restaurant MARCH 3, from 8 a. m. to 3 p. m. sharp.

THE AWAKENING

By NAN BURNS

©, 1922, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

One-two-three. The little French clock on the mantel ticked off the hours. The man was coming again. Carol pushed back a loose strand of golden hair and viewed herself again in the small mirror over the dining room shelf. She was pretty—too pretty to wither and fade alone in the small back apartment in the dreary part of the city. John left early in the morning before she could jump out of bed to make his cup of coffee and, as the distance from his work was too great for him to return for lunch, it was not until 6:30 that she heard the key click in the door and his cheery, "Heigho, Carrie!"

He was a good sort, an awfully good sort, but the golden years of youth were slipping fast and—the man was coming again. It was quite by accident she had met him—two weeks before. She was rushing home from the corner grocery with a package of eggs under her arm—eggs were so unromantic—and the sack burst. Lo! she and a stranger were viewing the wretched mess. They smiled, they talked, and at three o'clock that afternoon Carol rouged her lips, powdered her nose and jumped into a very smart blue car chugging away before her apartment.

He had come often to the lonely, dingy apartment since then. He was coming today, and Carol was to give him the answer to a big question—whether she would continue to sit waiting, watching through the beautiful days of youth for a poor, hard-working husband, who only half appreciated her, or go with the man—to sail with him to the ends of the world—to London, to Paris, to China, and to have him buy her all the things she had so long craved.

One-two-three-four. Her decision had been made—the black traveling bag was packed and her hat lay upon the table.

There was a ring. It was not time for the man. Oh!—the postman. Carol rushed downstairs and returned with a small blue envelope. She hastily tore it open and read:

"Dearest Carol:

"Our baby died—our little Elsie. I scarcely can see through my tears to write, but I knew and Jack knew that you alone could sympathize. The world has suddenly turned black—I cannot see which way to go. I want my baby, and through all my sorrow I seem to see your sweet face, my brave Carol. You were the most noble of girl wives when you laid your little Ethel away forever. I shall remember always how you put your hand on John's arm and told him it was God's wish, and that you and he would make the fight together.

"It is you always I see before me now—you and John. We must be brave for these boyhood sweethearts who are trying to conquer the uphill fight. I shall be with you before long. I want to sit beside you and have you tell me how to be the same sweet, unselfish person you are. I shall bring some trinkets of Elsie's. Good-by. Your sincerest friend, ETHEL."

The letter slipped from Carol's hands. She could not see it. There were large tears on the rouged cheeks and the powdered nose. Her face was buried in the arm of the chair.

"Baby Ethel!" she sobbed. "John's baby and mine. My poor John—you have worked and—"

She slowly walked over to a drawer in the small desk and opened it. Taking a tissue paper parcel from a far corner, she leaned over and untied it. A pair of pink shoes fell out.

One, two, three, four, five. The door bell tinkled loud and louder. It stopped, then started again. All became quiet save for the chugging of an automobile before the apartment. In a few moments even that had ceased, and Carol was alone.

It was growing late—and so much to be done—the bag unpacked, John's supper and—

She tied up the tissue paper parcel, tenderly caressed it, and laid it away.

One—two—three—four—five — six the little French clock ticked off the hours.

Mixed Club Membership.

The principal amusement in Paris clubs for men is in most cases card playing, a new book on the French capital says.

In some of the clubs the membership was formerly rather mixed, the author continues; and in one of these at one time a widely known English nobleman, having found that his pocketbook, containing several thousand francs, had been taken out of his coat hanging in the hall, hinted to the house committee that it must have been purloined either by the members or the waiters. Their answer was: "We can answer for the waiters!"

Many of the waiters referred to grow rich, it is said, from tips and money lending. A member of one of these clubs once called up the old head waiter and said, "Baptiste, I want a valet. Can you find a good man for me?"

"Alas, monsieur," was the reply, "I fear not. As a matter of fact, I have been unable to find one for myself."—From the Outlook.

GOOD SHOWING IN EXPORTS

Increase in Value of Agricultural Implements Sent Abroad Remarkable Under the Circumstances.

An increase of more than $12,000,000 appears in the value of exports of American agricultural implements in 1921 over 1913. Exports of pumps increased by over $8,000,000, largely as a result of increased use of pumps for irrigation purposes, and tractors (traction engines) increased by over $4,000,000.

This increase over 1913 is considered remarkable, says the agricultural implement division of the Department of Commerce, because of the many markets which were closed to American exporters of agricultural machinery on account of the war and the economic chaos which has succeeded it in some parts of the world, notably Russia, central Europe and the Balkan states, which in normal times might be expected to be large purchasers of modern farm equipment.

Boy's Heart in This Essay.

From a schoolboy's essay on soap: "Soap is a kind of stuff made in cakes what you can't eat. It smells good and tastes orful. Soap always tastes worst when you get it in your eye. Father says Eskimose don't never use soap. I wish I was an Eskimose."

ROAD BUILDING

SCRUBBING-BOARD SURFACES

Bureau of Public Roads Building Experimental Highway to Determine Cause of Waves.

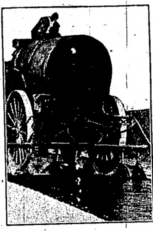
(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

What causes a "tarred" road to develop that peculiar scrubbing-board surface is a question that has been worrying the highway engineers quite as much as the long-suffering public. As often as not the symptoms appear in a macadam road that has been treated with asphalt. But the trouble is largely confined to roads built with tar or asphalt. Concrete and brick roads never develop such a surface, and ordinary dirt roads seldom do.

The bureau of public roads of the United States Department of Agriculture is building at the Arlington (Va.) experimental farm an experimental roadway 15 feet wide in an attempt to discover the cause of the trouble. The road is laid out in the form of a circle with a 90-foot radius, and its circumference, 565 feet in length, is to be divided into sections, each of which will be surfaced with a different kind of asphalt or tarred surface.

The experimental sections will be built exactly like actual road surfaces and when completed they will carry a "traffic" as much like actual traffic as it is possible to devise. The "traffic" will be supplied by a driverless motortruck which will be held to the circular path by means of a long arm extending from the center. The course of the truck will be altered from time to time so that the entire width of the roadway will be traveled.

It has not been possible to determine the cause by observation of actual roads because there are too many unknown quantities. The defect may be due to distortion of the earth under the road surface or to defects in the surface itself. It is probably caused in some way by the wheels of motor vehicles—how and why the engineers have not determined, largely because they have never possessed all the facts with regard to surface and subsurface conditions and character and weight of traffic.



Treating the Surface of a Macadam Road With Bituminous Material.

OILED ROADS ARE APPROVED

Operation Must Be Performed Intelligently or It Will Make Conditions Worse.

The American Highway Bulletin, which approves of oiled roads, observes that oiling must be performed intelligently or it will make conditions worse instead of better. According to this authority it is useless to oil a dirt road which is not thoroughly drained and properly graded. It is a waste of money to oil a road which does not have a smooth hard surface free from dust. If the surface is uneven, oil collects in shallow depressions and softens the surface so that after the first heavy rain the travel tends to make mudholes at these places. If there is dust on the road, the oil combines with the dust to form a sort of mat, which the travel over it quickly breaks up into large flakes or scales. But if the road is in proper condition to receive the oil and the right kind of oil is used, the oil percolates into the pores of the earth for a depth of several inches, sealing them with an asphaltic binding material which unites the surface into a tougher mass than the original surface. The oil cannot make the road any harder, for only stone or gravel will accomplish that, but it will prevent the displacement of the earth particles under any loads which an earth road is adapted to carry. If the oiled surface is immediately covered with a thin layer of clean, hard sand, the travel will not disturb the oil and the travelers will suffer less inconvenience.

Gate for Crossings.

A new safety gate for railroad crossings is designed which stretches across the road like the old style gate, but is flexible and elastic, so that it gives instead of breaks when run into. The gate will force the vehicle backwards, away from danger.

Useless Work on Roads.

Work on dirt roads at this season is worse than useless unless the soil is very dry and the road is hard rolled after working.

Behold the class of '22
All sitting in a row
But when they spy a teacher
They all begin to go.
Marie is very dignified
She wouldn't crack a smile,
But Arline's just the other way
She's laughing all the while.
There are many others in our class
Who are worthy of our mention
And I'm sure if they were here
They would all draw attention.
But Oh! the class of '22
Is very bright and gay,
For in it are the very best
Of Maids and Youths today.

But I can never go to she.

An Old Subscriber

Among our list of those renewing subscriptions for this week we note with pleasure that of Wash Adams, one of the few remaining pioneers in this section. Mr. Adams first subscribed for the Spectator when it was established by Mr. McKenzie over forty years ago, and he has been on the list since. While there are a number of instances where the family of some deceased pioneer has renewed from year to year so the name has been continuously on the books, Mr. Adams is the only one of the original list, so far as we can ascertain, who personally attends to his renewal each year. We acknowledge Mr. Adams' visit with thanks, and express a hope that he will be with us for many years to come.

Gummer Found Guilty

The trial of William Gummer, alleged murderer of Miss Marie Wick at the Prescott Hotel at Fargo, which was held at Valley City, N. D. ended last Friday when the jury brought in a verdict of guilty. The case, owing to its gruesome details, has attracted a good deal of attention in this part of the country. Miss Wick, who was a resident of Grygla, which is about 45 miles northeast of here, stopped at the Prescot Hotel at Fargo while enroute to visit a sister in Dakota. She was assaulted and killed that night. Wm Gummer was clerk of the hotel. Evidence produced by the state tends to eliminate all possibility that the heinous crime could have been committed by anyone except the defendant. The verdict meets with approval of everyone who has followed up the case closely.

We Thank You

We acknowledge with thanks, subscription payments from the following since last publication of the list: Hans Wilsen, Mrs. Albert Nelson, Joe Patton, Wash Adams, Theo. Benson, H. R. Allen, H. J. As this is the season when expenses are heaviest in our line, we thoroughly appeciate the thoughtfulness of those who make these payments.

Recommendation of the State Board of Health for control of Epidemic Influenza.

Influenza is spread from person to person:—

Directly in nose and mouth discharges.

Indirectly on hands, common eating and drinking utensils, towels, etc, therefore, whenever possible, avoid, (a) Association with sick persons especially with symptoms of a Common Cold (b) Crowds anywhere, but especially in ill-ventilated places. (c) The use of common drinking and eating utensils, towels, etc. (d) Exchange of pencils and other articles likely to be placed in the mouth.

2. Isolation of early cases is necessay for the prevention of a widespread epidemic. Persons having the symptoms of influenza should remain at home at least five days after the fever has reached normal. This especially applies to school children.

Do not be fooled by the mildness of the attack as all epidemics are mild in their beginning.

Dr. F. N. Bjerken,
Health Officer.

The card club was entertained by Miss Selma Hoff at her home last Tuesday evening. A fine time is reported.

Her Prophetic Name

By MARTHA MACWILLIAMS

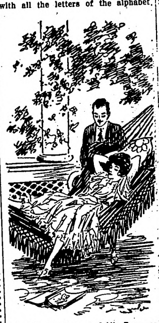
A faint, silken, ruffling breath, too faint to be called wind, brought the heliotrope scent, hot and almond-sweet, to the hammock. Hero lay prone in it, half-bare arms locked lightly beneath her head, one absurdly small foot dangling almost to earth, the other thrust impudently upward where the hammock began to rise. Lacy, sun-flecked shadows played over her mist-white garments; now and again an especially tricky beam made a high, gold light in her tumbled hair. Snuffing the wind-blown scent, she said aloud: "Can love be sweeter? I wonder!"

"Suppose you adventure and find out," Lossing half-whispered over her head. He had crept upon her so silently she did not dream of his presence. Yet she did not stir for it. Instead, she shut her eyes, murmuring drowsily: "Beauty sleep is what I need. Go play with May-Blossom Tiptoe. She's moving heaven and earth and the backyard fence getting ready for tomorrow's demonstration."

"What sort is it?" Lossing queried. Hero half opened her eyes as she flung at him reproachfully: "Am I a 'cyclopedia? Do I look it? No! Well, then, why ask such a question? Maybe its pigs, or poultry, or canning, or conserving, or quilting, or some other absurdity. When all the world's a club or else a demonstrator I'm wondering a little what it will do for more subjects to demonstrate."

"Possibly it will tackle courting, then," Lossing flung back airily; "one horribly neglected science right about this present time."

"Such ignorance!" Hero shot back at him. "As though anybody, even with all the letters of the alphabet after her name, could demonstrate what can neither be taught nor learned."



She Did Not Dream of His Presence.

"Distilling the wisdom of experience—eh!" Lossing answered, moving so he could look her full in her face. Heaven's innocence was in it, yet the ghost of a tricky smile lurked in her deepest dimple—the one in the left cheek. Silken lashes, long, dark and curling, lay lightly upon seashell cheeks. The single coral eardrop visible was not a clearer scarlet than the mouth half shut over small white teeth. No wonder Hero was so full of sparkle and whimsy, thought Lossing. She had known ever since she first sat alone how beautiful she was. How could she help against a background of poor, lumbersome May! May Blossom, Hero's name for her, was witty rather than kind.

They were almost twins—a bare year between them. As unlike, though, as an ugly duckling and a bird of paradise. May, younger by date, was years older by nature; also stouter, more work-a-day in build, manner and temperament, and always the willing and devoted slave of her elder. Hero, she had insisted, should be sent to a finishing school, to come home all accomplished; also, and further, she must have all that befitted such going away, quite regardless of her own needs. She did not matter—never would, indeed. Her liveliest hope was to love, serve and shield the flower of the family.

Fate, turned cynic, sometimes upsets the most altruistic endeavors. Thus it fell out that when, through the bane of honest men, surety, evil befell the Langdon household, it was not the accomplished Hero, but May, the stout and resourceful, that routed the wolf from the door. She knew gardening by heart, made a fine art of canning, could outcook the county, raise more and finer poultry with less per cent of loss, make butter better than gilt-edge, and take prizes at the state fair for simple plain sewing, so, in spite of the ill-bred proverb, won much honor in her own county that she was shrewd-witted enough to turn into cold [illegible]. Children [illegible] sprang up as by [illegible] further exalted her. Also the backwash brought profit to Hero—capricious though she was, and self-indulgent, she yet had a real fiber that forbade her to be a millstone about the family neck.

She might have married out of hand, but for her reluctance to play the game on the neck-or-nothing principle. It was tough teaching dancing to younglings with no music in their souls, or music to those whose idea of harmony was jazz on the ukulele, but then divorce from those things was so safe and easy—neither scandal nor expense, nor even hard thoughts.

Lossing knew all about that—knew further that right now Hero's soul yearned for extra and easy money. "I'd commit murder—almost matrimony—for an even hundred dollars right in hand," she had confided to him yesterday. Hence his reappearance today, which she had immediately postponed till next week. He drew her to her feet, saying importantly:

"Get up! Can't talk business to anything so distracting as you look there. Then, as he established her upon a stone-and-turf seat: "You can make that hundred dollars—if you're dead game."

"Lead me to it! At once!" Hero cried, springing up and stamping her foot. Lossing grinned. "Not till I phone somebody"; running away as he spoke, to reappear shortly grinning harder than before. "Struck a bull market," he explained, "so I raised the prices, two hundred flat if the thing is doable in three lessons—"

"Whatever are you up to?" Hero interrupted. "Something steep," he answered. "Boy Ellis is six foot three in stockings—"

"And thirty, at least." Hero interjected angrily. "It can't be that he wants to dance."

"He's got to, or lose deal." Lossing explained: "He's to lead the grand march at the 'bang-kwet' fair week with Mrs. Governor, and open the ball afterward. You know how he's been raised, his folks thinking dancing was all the deadly sins made into a pie. Even now he's 'fraid to let them know what's doing. He'll be supposed to come here courting, which will be nearly as upsetting to the old folks, but you can give him a property rejection and so save his face."

"Ought to have an extra hundred for that," Hero commented. Lossing nodded. A motor was purring down the lane. In half a minute it had disgorged Boy Ellis and a fat traveling bag, which his later appearance explained. From it had come silk socks, pumps, a swallow-tail, and all that goes with it, when Lossing had duly inducted him into the garments. Hero rose nobly to the task. She had a good phonograph—Lossing worked it nobly—for the space of a full hour she worked with might and main.

Hopeless it seemed—then rang the dinner bell. The sound of it electrified Boy Ellis. He took two steps and four twirls without stepping upon Hero's toes. Then May Blossom flung open the door, crying: "Come out, you bad children, unless you'd rather dance than eat!"

"Thanky, marm; I sho'ly hadn't," from the boy, blushing furiously as he caught sight of himself in the mantel-mirror. "I know I better go home," he ran on, "but if I can keep at this till round five o'clock I think I can make the riffle."

"Not a doubt of it!" quoth Lossing, slapping him on the back. "May Blossom's cooking ought to make a wooden Indian dance."

Maybe it did. At any rate before sundown the boy went joyously away, saying naively as he shook hands all round: "I'll be here bright and early tomorrow, but you won't get rid of me before dinner time." As Hero's eyes followed his car away she sank down crying: "At last my name is justified. Fetch on your medals and things. After this I'm entitled to all there are—and then some."

Three P's—patience, practice, perseverance—most commonly spell success. They did for the Boy. Next noon he danced without counting. He passed to Lossing for Hero ten twenty-dollar gold pieces, smiling like a cherub. Incidentally next week he proposed to May Blossom. They were married New Year's and the Boy actually danced with Hero, to the scandal and delight of his happy parents.

Page the Critics.

When the scoffers scoff, and the mockers mock, and the knockers stand at the side and knock, just roll up your sleeves and buckle in, and stick to your task, and you're bound to win. If the thing's worth while, you are sure to hear the doubters doubt and the jeerers jeer, for never a victor has risen yet, but somewhere the jibes of the wise has met. So, deaf to the scoffers, just work along; and stick to your dream till you know it's wrong, and toss them a smile when you hear folks mock; it's a healthy sign when the knockers knock.—The Kansas Booster.

Potent, Whatever It Was.

A Camden (N. J.) policeman saw a man jumping around like a frog. "What are you trying to do?" asked the policeman. "Go away; I'm a bullfrog," replied the man, whom the policeman arrested. Arraigned before the recorder, the prisoner said he did not know what he had been drinking. "Bullfrog rum, most likely," interrupted the prosecutor. "Guess that's what it was," replied the prisoner, who was fined $10.

GORGAS MEMORIAL

In memory of the great work in sanitation accomplished by the late Surgeon General William C. Gorgas there is to be built in Panama city the Gorgas memorial institute of tropical preventive medicine. Leading medical centers of the world will send members of their staff for study. The site for the institution will be one of the most beautiful in the city of Panama, fronting the Pacific ocean. The board of directors of the memorial hopes to raise between $3,000,000 and $5,000,000 with which to run and maintain the institute.

FEARS FOR MAYFLOWERS

Declaring that the practices of commercial interests will cause the mayflower, or trailing arbutus, to disappear from the forests of Massachusetts, Albert G. Burrage petitioned the legislature to prohibit the sale of the flowers. It has been found, he said, that the gatherers of the flowers for market have been pulling them up by the roots to such an extent that extinction is a matter of only a few years.

BASKETBALL AVERAGES

We give below the average of basketball teams in the High School Conference, as reported up to Feb. 6th. The conference is to be held at Crookston this month: Crookston 888, Stephen 714, Fosston 667, Warroad 500, Baudette 600, Argyle 555, McIntosh 555, Ada 500, Thief River Falls 500, Fertile 400, Warren 375, East Grand Forks 200, Hallock 200, Bagley 000, Mahnomen 000, Roseau 000. It is interesting to know that the average of our team compares very favorably with those in the conference, it being 750, not counting two games won from the city team.

Senior: "Oh, I beg your pardon. What idiot are you?"

THE WAY TO FLUNK

Observe the following rules from now until examination time, and you will have no difficulty in flunking:

Take all you studies home. Wait until after supper.—then study until you haven't yet started. Invite over some entertaining company, and forget all about your books until 11:30. Then go to it again for about five minutes, at which time you will begin to think you could study better in the morning. Go to bed and dream until morning. Don't pay any attention to calls and stay in bed until past eight o'clock. By the time you have had breakfast you will find there is no time for the studying you had planned to do, so go to school and bluff your way the best you can. These rules, followed closely, will put you thru in great fashion.

Fellow Citizens:—

As a member of the Senate from the district that surrounds you, i wish to make miself plane as to where and how i stand on the problems, etc., before Congress.

In the first place, I am utterly and absolutely favorable to the Soldiers Bonus Law and if not passed, i'll give the soldiers money out of mi own pocket. In the second place i do not see no use of scrapping with the ships. What's the use of us scrapping them when they can do all the scrapping they want in war? In the third place i disfavor borrowing more money to europe. It would be different if they would borrow to me.

Among the bills i intend to present to congress, are the following: 1. A bill to keep dumb men out of Congress They are a menace to the country and it is not good for my intellect to mingle with them. 2. A bill to make thermometers register above zero. thereby prohibiting much of this cold weather. 3. A bill to put all our ex-presidents on pension, from Washington to the present time, with the provision that the pension would be increased should i get to be president.

I think this is all on my program for this time, and i hereby assure you i will fight it out on this line if it takes all summer.

Very respectively & obligingly
yours truly.

ODD AND GRATIFYING

Have you ever shaken hands with a very notable person, one whom you have never seen before, and have him inquire about your family and call them by name? This happened to me when Senator Thomas Sterling from South Dakota visited Illinois Wesleyan university, where I am a student. I started to pass by him in the hall and he stopped me. "And what is your name, my little boy?" he inquired. "Green," I replied. He asked then if I were H. M. Green's boy, and I told him I was. Then he talked to me for almost ten minutes, telling me how he used to carry my grandmother to school through the snow. He also knew all my relatives in South Dakota.—Chicago Journal.

Caring for Cut Flowers.

It is reported that some interesting experiments have been made in the school of agriculture in prolonging the lives of cut flowers. One hundred different flowers were employed in the experiments, and it was found that sugar helped to keep most of them fresh, but was injurious to lilies and sweet peas. It hastened the opening of roses and orchids, but did not affect tulips, daisies or chrysanthemums. Experiments were made with small quantities of chloral, ether, glycerin, alcohol, lime water and ammonia salts, each of which served to lengthen the lives of various flowers. Some of the flowers kept in sugar and water lived four times as long as they ordinarily would. The sugar does not have an exactly equal effect on the different flowers it preserves. Carnations seem to like a 15 per cent solution, and roses do betetr in a solution of from eight to ten per cent.

Clever Mice.

Mice are getting smarter, asserts a suburban housewife, who is trying to rid her home of the unwelcome guests. Ordinary traps are of little avail, and she finds herself outmaneuvered in every engagement. First, she baited with butter. In the morning she found the trap licked clean and unsprung. Then she placed a piece of fried bacon in position, confidently expecting to find a captured mouse. But the next morning the bacon was gone and no mouse remained behind. In desperation she again baited with a piece of bacon and tied it securely to the platform of the patent snare. The next morning she found the trap lying upside down, but there was no victim under the spring, and the bait was gone. She declares the mouse, seeing the bait tied, deliberately sprang the trap by upsetting it, and then ate the bait.

The Red Lake Drainage Project

—By Sub Urban—

(Slightly "abridged and revised" since first printed in "Eleven Towns", summer of 1917.)

There's the Red Lake Drainage Project under way—
First "survey marks" are getting old, we know;
Let the dredges start to work to speed the day
When surplus waters through the MAIN CANAL will flow.

They prate about "Alberta" and what not,—
But "Make a Noise for Minnesota"—how is that?
Boost for what we want and haven't got:
For drainage measures, pioneers, "stand pat!"

A "Barrel of Pork", they tried to make us to believe
When crops of states and nations were submerged;
Red Rivers of the North you can't deceive,—
States of North Star Rainy Regions all concerned.

The way to boost for Northern Minnesota,
Is FOR THE RECLAMATION OF THE SLOUGHS—
That's what counts, if not more than one iota—
Till COMPLETION OF THE PROJECT brings the news!

Community Club Meets

Regular meeting of the Community Club was held at the school building last Friday night. At election of officers which preceded the social session and program, the following were elected for the spring term: Fred Wesloh, president, Geo. Fricker, secretary and M. H. Jackson, treasurer. A fine program was given by the school children who are deserving of much credit for their efforts. The high school Glee Club and orchestra rendered several selections that were greatly appreciated. After the program a lunch was served in the domestic science room. Candy was sold by the eighth grade pupils. In spite of bad roads, the meeting was well attended, every avaialble seat being taken and even standing room was at a premium. Date for next meeting was not a set but will be announced later.

Village Election

The annual village election will be held next Tuesday at which time a president of the village council, one councilman, recorder, treasurer, justice of the peace, and constables will be elected. Under the new law, delegates to the republican county convention will be elected on the same day.

A meeting of board of education will be held Friday night to consider such bids as are submitted for purchase of $20,000 00 bonds of the district which were issued last year but were not sold at that time.

St. Patrick Dance

Instead of the dancing club giving their Saturday evening dance this week, a St. Patrick's Day dance will be given at the Imperial hall Friday evening, March 17th.

The spring session of district court closed Friday. Only a few cases were taken up at this term, many being set over to the adjourned term to be held the last of this month:

A simple method of avoiding the "flu" which is contracted by coming in close contact with other persons, is to eat raw onions liberally every day. This serves to keep other people at a distance thereby lessening the danger.

The Old Guard

Since publication last week of the little news item about old subscribers of this paper, August Svenson, prominent River Falls farmer, came in and renewed his subscription and incidently informed us that he was one of the original list of subscribers who signed up for the Spectator before it started publication forty years ago There are probably others who can qualify for the 40 year class, and we shall be glad to hear from them.

Fine Weather

While other parts of the good old U. S. A., are having rough weather, this section enjoyed some real spring weather last Thursday, Friday Saturday and Sunday. The snow drifts shrunk to less than one third their former size and citizens were busy ditching to run off surplus water from their premises.

Back To Par Again

Canadian currency which has been discounted in this country at from 12 to 20 percent since, ending of the war, is again back to par. It is now being accepted thru this part of the state and in Dakota at face value. Minneapolis and St. Paul banks discount it a 2 percent which is the same rate as prevailed for many years when it was accepted at par in parts of the state close to the border.

Road Results First

The state highway department in a circular letter to newspapers states that it "is seriously concerned with the problem of keeping trunk routes open in winter, and would have moved weeks ago had a feasable plan been founud." Because of the heavy expense and claims for other kinds of work, the department finds it has insufficient funds to justify a snow removal campaign at this early stage of highway development, consequently it will exert its energies to keep the roads in good condition during the summer when hundreds of tourists and ten times as many Minnesota people will use them.

Good Roads And Taxes

We have heard a lot of talk about high taxes and good roads. The former is said to have its origin in the latter. In this connection it is interesting to get comparisions from other states.

We talked with a man the past week who lives on his farm in northern Nebraska and is interested in a farm of the same size near Tracy. We were very agreeably surprised when he informed us that the taxes he paid on the two farms only differed by a few dollars, the difference he attributed to a difference on improvments.

He had unstinted praise for our good roads.

Nebraska still clings to the old dirt road, and yet the taxes on her farm land are as high as those on farms in Minnesota where the finest roads in the country are found.—Tracy Headlight Herald.

Pretty Molly and Her Slogan

By FRANK H. WILLIAMS

©, 1922, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

Pretty Molly Malone had a slogan that meant a lot to Jack Hoffman, but Jack didn't know it.

Jack only knew that he tingled all over clear down to the tips of his toes in his large good-looking shoes whenever he gazed into Molly's big brown eyes, and longed to tell her she was the sweetest girl in the world and that he'd be the happiest man ever if only she'd let him lead her to a preacher and put a wedding ring on her finger.

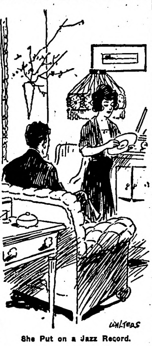
But it is not quite the whole truth to say Jack knew nothing more than that Molly was the only girl for him. He also knew that she treated him rather disdainfully, that she had a lot of other beaux and that it didn't seem to mean much in her young life whether he came around or not. And that was a very disagreeable thing to know and no one can blame Jack for fighting back this distressing knowledge and trying to fool himself all the time into a belief that he didn't know it at all.

But the knowledge of Molly's purely platonic attitude toward him would rush over Jack like a dark cloud every now and then when, as tonight, he called up Molly for a date and was turned down because of a previous engagement with another fellow.

"Gee!" grumbled Jack over the phone after Molly had said, "I'm sorry," in the sweetest voice imaginable. "I'm about as popular with you as the smallpox. Aren't you ever going to break a date with another fellow so's to have one with me?"

"Why, Jack," exclaimed Molly, reprovingly, "you wouldn't like it if I broke a date with you to go out with someone else, would you?"

"That isn't the point at all," exclaimed Jack. "Here I am lying down and letting you walk all over me and everything, and I don't seem to be getting anywhere with it at all. It just riles me all up to have you treat me only as if I was a good friend and nothing more."



She Put on a Jazz Record.

A silvery giggle was Molly's answer to this.

"You can't keep running around with everybody always," went on Jack mournfully. Sometimes I think you don't care any more about me than nothing at all. You seem to look through me and around me for somebody else. What makes you treat me like that?"

"Oh," came the surprising answer, "that's because I'm living up to my slogan."

This was the very first time Jack had ever heard anything about Molly's slogan and it mystified him.

"What slogan?" he queried. "What do you mean? What is your slogan?"

"Oh, that would be telling," cried Molly. "I'm not going to tell you what my slogan is. But you know what a slogan is; it's a sort of guiding star, or philosophy of life, or whatever highbrow name you want to call it. It helps you decide what to do and all that sort of thing. Well, I've got a slogan and I'm living by it."

"Tell me what it is," pleaded Jack.

"No, I'll never tell!" said Molly.

"Never is a long, long time," exclaimed Jack. "Please tell."

"No, no," said Molly. "Good-by Maybe I'll be able to go with you the next time you call up."

And she hung up the receiver.

Jack walked away from the phone disconsolately.

"Now I wonder what her slogan is, anyway," said Jack to himself. "If I could only find out what it is I might have a chance with her! By Jove, I am going to win her! I've played around with a lot of girls in my time and I've passed up a lot of dandies, but there never was a girl like Molly and I'm going to get her if it's the last thing I do. But I wish I could get her off this friendly footing stuff and make her take a real personal interest in me. What is her old slogan anyway [illegible]

[illegible] to stop running around with any one but Molly, he didn't make much progress in his avowed intention of capturing her heart. She was always gay but elusive.

"You're the hardest girl in the world to get," exclaimed Jack ruefully one day, "but that's the reason I'm all the more determined to get you."

Molly smiled at him quizzically.

"How many other girls have you told that?" she queried.

"Not one!" cried Jack, emphatically, edging closer to her. They were seated on the davenport in the boarding house where Molly roomed.

"No?" countered Molly, with a dismaying inflection which indicated polite interest and nothing more. And she rose and sauntered over to the phonograph where she put on a jazz record which made the room ring.

Jack waited quietly until this piece was finished. Then he went to Molly and put his hands on her.

"I know what your old slogan is—that you're living up to all the time," he declared.

"Yes?" queried Molly.

"Yes, it's 'Beware of Men' or 'Never Get Married' or something like that, isn't it?"

"I'll never tell," Molly smiled exasperatingly again.

It was then and there that Jack got an inspiration.

"I'm not getting anywhere this way," said Jack to himself as Molly put on another record. "It's up to me to do something radical or desperate. Now, what can I do?"

For a few minutes he thought over this question. Then a light came into his eyes and his manner became animated and happy. He saw Molly looking at him curiously as he laughed and capered around the room. But he didn't tell Molly of the idea that had come to him. The idea was much too radical and desperate for that.

The next afternoon about the time when Molly left the office where she was employed as a stenographer, Jack was waiting for her with a rented flivver. He saw that she was alone as she came from the office, and he saw her manifest surprise and real interest as he hailed her.

"Get in," said Jack, "and I'll drive you home."

"Is it yours?" queried Molly, referring to the car.

"No, I'm just using it," said Jack.

Almost at once Jack set off down the street at a furious pace. For a while Molly sat beside him contentedly enough. Then she began showing signs of perturbation.

"Jack," she cried at last, "where are you going? This isn't the way to my home."

"I'll show you where I'm going," cried Jack rather grimly. And he pushed the throttle down another notch.

Molly's excitement grew, and so, for that matter, did Jack's. For a time it looked to Jack as though Molly was contemplating leaping from the car in spite of his fast pace. So he gave the car even more gas and bumped over tracks and holes in the pavement regardless of consequences. Finally he drew up in front of a modest house.

"Here we are!" he cried.

He hustled Molly into the house before she could stop him. Inside the house a preacher was awaiting them. It was a preacher's house to which Jack had taken Molly. With a flourish Jack drew out a marriage license and a wedding ring.

Then he looked at Molly with his heart in his mouth. Would he be successful in this desperate endeavor? Would she go through with this surprise marriage, or—or—

All Jack's soul was in his eyes as he gazed fixedly at Molly. For just a moment her eyes were inscrutable. Then into them leaped the light that Jack longed to see, and all the world turned bright.

Some few minutes later Mr. and Mrs. Jack Hoffman returned to the flivver.

"I knew I'd have to do something desperate," confided Jack to his wife, "as long as you were living by that 'Beware of Man' slogan. I was right about what your slogan is, wasn't I?"

But Molly simply smiled.

"I'll never tell," she said.

And she didn't.

And who can blame her? Her slogan—the principle on which she had guided her life—was this: "Worry 'em if you want 'em!"

Testing Colors.

The fading of colors in dyed materials and wall papers is said to be caused by the invisible ultra-violet rays in sunlight. Formerly, observes an expert in such matters, the carpet makers and dye merchants in Europe tested the colors by sending their materials to be exposed in the strong sunlight of the South. Now they get the same results by using the electric mercury-vapor lamp and a quartz tube. By exposing the materials to the ultraviolet rays thus artificially produced, they can in a few days, and in any climate, test the permanency of the colors.—Christian Science Monitor.

MAN OF INFINITE RESOURCE

Washington Official Would Seem to Be Especially Fitted for High Diplomatic Post.

Capt. David S. Barry, Jr., who is in charge of the marines guarding the mail of the country, is a resourceful man. He has been all over the world, stood on the great wall of China, explored the mystic isles of the South seas, and now he sits at a desk in the Postoffice department.

The other day two young women called at the department. They were on a sightseeing tour and wanted to go over the department. Some one thought it would be a good joke to play on Barry, so the two young ladies were introduced to him.

"We would like to see the postmaster general's room," said one of the young women with a smile.

Barry disappeared into an inner office, soon to return.

"I'm sorry," he replied, with his best smile, "the postmaster general is in his office now."

The young woman smiled sweetly.

"We would like to see the postmaster general," she said.

Captain Barry did his disappearing act again, but soon returned.

"I'm sorry," he replied, "the postmaster general is out now."—Washington Star.

However, for some work imported products are preferred and considerable quantities continue to be imported. BIRD LOVERS FORM LEAGUE

Two Hundred Thousand Australians in Organization to Promote Knowledge Among Children.

About 200,000 Australians are enrolled in the Bird Lovers' league. Among the ways in which Australian children are brought into line with the ideals of the bird lovers who started this movement are competitions in drawing birds from memory, the imitation of bird calls, and the identification of birds by name. At a public gathering in Melbourne recently, colored chalks were given the children and they were allowed five minutes to do a blackboard sketch. The winner showed an alert and life-like kookaburra, or laughing jackass. In the test which called for imitations of birds one of the best was that of the curious laugh of the kookaburra, which rings through the Australian bush and is often heard in the outskirts of townships. The third test, the identification of birds, was conducted by the showing of 15 lantern slides, each being thrown on a screen for 15 seconds, during which time the competitors had to write down the correct name.

Clerk of the District Court,
Pennington Conty, Minn.

STATE OF MINNESOTA }
County of Pennington } ss

I, T. P. Anderson, County Auditor in and for the County of Pennington and State of Minnesota, do hereby certify that the foregoing copy of the list of Real Estate Taxes in said County remaining delinquent on the first Monday in January, 1922, was this day received from the Clerk of the District Court in and for said County and State.

Witness my hand and official seal this 4th day of February, A. D. 1922.

T. P. ANDERSON,
County Auditor,
Pennington County, Minn.

NOTE—Parties remitting for the above will please add 30 cents to each item to cover cost of printing and Clerk of Court's fees.

UNCANNY, PERHAPS, BUT TRUE

How many readers of this newspaper have personal knowledge of incidents similar to this one?.

Out at Denver a lawyer by the name of Daniel L. Webb put a dog in a crate and shipped him to a friend in Nevada, 1,000 miles away.

The dog arrived in Nevada safe and sound. The crate was opened and Mr. Dog made one leap for the door and could not be found.

Several days later Mr. Webb heard a barking at his back door at his Denver home and opening the door found the dog he had shipped to Nevada.

How the dog, locked up in a baggage car, could find his way back from a strange and far away country is a puzzle not yet answered. But there have been many other such cases.—Ex.

Fourteenth Judicial District.

THE STATE OF MINNESOTA, to all persons, companies, or corporations who have or claim any estate, right, title, or interest in, claim to, or lien upon, any of the several parcels of land described in the list hereto attached:

The list of taxes and penalties on real property for the County of Pennington remaining delinquent on the first Monday in January, 1922, has been filed in the office of the clerk of the district court of said county, of which that hereto attached is a copy. Therefore you, and each of you, are hereby required to file in the office of said clerk, on or before the twentieth day after the publication of this notice and list, your answer in writing, setting forth any objection or defense you may have to the taxes, or any part thereof, upon any parcel of land described in said list, in, to or on which you have or claim any estate, right, title, interest, claim, or lien, and, in default thereof, judgment will be entered against such parcel of land for the taxes on said list appearing against it, and for all penalties, interest, and costs.

(Seal) ADOLF EKLUND,
Clerk of the District Court,
Pennington County, Minn.

List of Real Property for the County of Pennington on which taxes remained delinquent on the first Monday in January, 1922:

POULTRY

INCREASING EGG PRODUCTION

Poultry Keepers Will Do Well to Keep In Touch With What Leaders Are Doing.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The methods favored by large poultrymen for increasing the productivity of their flocks are often applicable on the general farm or in the back-yard poultry plant. Every poultry keeper will, therefore, do well to keep in touch with what the leaders are doing to increase their profits, says the United States Department of Agriculture. Certain localities in California, for instance, have become famous for their poultry and egg production, and the study that is given to these problems by farmers, and the owners of big plants, has resulted in a great improvement in their practices.

Obtaining High-Class Breeding Stock Is Easier for the Small Poultryman When Sales Are Held.

The county extension organization in Alameda county, California, has taken steps through its poultry division to raise the standard of all poultry in the county by improving the quality of fowls used in breeding flocks. Owners of hatcheries in the county have entered into an agreement with the county extension organization to use eggs for incubation from selected breeding stock, excluding the incubation of eggs from the general run of fowls in the locality, with the understanding that the county extension organization shall furnish judges to pass on the desirability of birds selected for breeding.

This method of controlling the quality of the poultry in a county is expected to result in a rapid general improvement in the productivity of the flocks. It should also give the county a good reputation wherever hatching eggs or birds are sold.

Promising development that is being encouraged in the famous Petaluma poultry district is the consignment sale of cockerels. In this the poultry breeders have been following the lead of other growers of high-class live stock. Cattle breeders have been holding bull sales for a number of years; sheep breeders have ram sales; hog breeders have sales of boars and of bred sows. In the case of cockerels no pedigree papers are supplied, as they are with other kinds of purebred live stock, but sworn affidavits as to breeding go with each bird.

A White Leghorn cockerel sale was held in Sonoma county (the Petaluma district) October 15. The 14 Pacific coast breeders who consigned birds gave sworn statements as to their breeding. According to the county agent, who was instrumental in putting on this sale, most of the 52 cockerels consigned represented unusually high breeding, many of them having pedigrees extending back eight or nine generations with trap-nest records. Most of them had inheritance records of more than 275 eggs in a year and some more than 300. The fact that 1,000 catalogues were issued shows the importance given to the first sale of this kind.

These two methods of flock improvement ought to be popular among poultry raisers in all parts of the country. They are practical, say the poultrymen of the United States Department of Agriculture, and they help to make good stock available to the average poultry raiser who in the past has had no assurance, other than the breeder's word, that he was getting birds of superior performance merit. Few dairymen, hog growers or beef-cattle raisers are also good live-stock breeders, but methods have been developed that make it possible for any good farmer to build up an excellent herd. It should be just as easy for a poultry raiser to improve his flock.

PREVENT SPREAD OF DISEASE

Roup and Other Contagious Ailments Are Difficult to Control—Separate Sick Birds.

Cold, damp, poorly lighted and ventilated poultry quarters favor the spread of such diseases as roup. Such contagious diseases as these are difficult and sometimes impossible to control unless given attention in the early stages. Wherever preventive measures fail, separate sick birds from the flock as soon as there is evidence of disease and then obtain expert ad- [illegible]

WAR MOTORS FOR ROAD WORK

Vehicles Comprise Virtually All of Surplus Cars Turned Over by War Department.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

More than 27,000 motor vehicles have been distributed by the bureau of public roads of the United States Department of Agriculture among the various states for road-building purposes. Up to October 31 a total of 27,198 had been so distributed, including 1,800 retained by the Department of Agriculture for use on roads in the national forests and in connection with the administration of the federal aid act. These comprise virtually all the surplus motor vehicles turned over to the Department of Agriculture by the War department to be distributed under the Wadsworth-Kahn act among the states for road-building purposes. These vehicles, consisting mostly of motortrucks, are a part of the war materials originally intended for use in France.

The number of motor vehicles distributed to the states up to October 31 was as follows:

CONCRETE ROAD MATERIALS

Engineers Making Experiments to Determine Just What Are Best and Right Proportions.

Experiments to determine just what kinds of materials are best for concrete, and in what proportions to mix them so that they will wear well in a road, are being made by engineers of the bureau of public roads, United States Department of Agriculture. An apparatus will be used that consists of heavy steel wheels which, guided by a mechanical arrangement, roll continuously back and forth over the pavement.

More than forty different sections of concrete pavement, each ten feet long, will be laid. Materials from many different parts of the country are being shipped to the government experiment farm at Arlington, Va., near Washington. They will be mixed with varying quantities of cement and water to determine which is best. Experience has shown that there is a measurable amount of wear of the surface of a concrete road each year.

MODERN COLLIERY PLANT

The colliery plant of the Star Norske Spitzbergen Kulkompani is said to be the most modern one in Europe. Operation recently began at one at Longyear, Spitsbergen. In five days 1,800 tons of coal were produced, equivalent to 90,000 tons a year, with only two-thirds of the machinery in operation. When the whole plant is in full working order a monthly output of 20,000 tons may be reckoned with. The new power station throughout is of modern construction and equipment. It develops 750 horsepower, which, with the 300 horsepower of the old station, puts more than 1,000 horsepower at the disposal of the company.

GOTHAM READS MORE BOOKS

Volumes Lent by Public Library Exceed Prewar Figure, Says Report.

New York.—New Yorkers read more books in 1921 than in any year since or before the war—10,226,366. This is indicated by the report of the public library. The big reading months were January, February and March. The library calls attention to its crippled finances, stating that with the increased demand it is much less prepared than ever to meet the public's desire for reading matter.

Funds for books have been cut in half in the last two years.

Niagara Falls Moving.

The edge of Niagara falls is steadily moving backward toward Lake Erie, owing to the work of the water in cutting away the rock over which it falls. At the Horseshoe falls the recession is at an average rate of five feet a year. The American falls are retreating much less rapidly. Geologists estimate that it has taken from 20,000 to 35,000 years to cut the Niagara gorge.

HUNT SECRET OF LIFE

Biological Chemists Claim to Be Close on Trail.

British Scientists Have High Hopes of Being Able to Create Vital Spark—Seek Exact Chemical Combination.

London.—A hunt more exciting than any man hunt is going on at present in the laboratories of some of the adventurous biological chemists—a hunt for the secret of life.

It is now seriously hoped by some of the more advanced scientists that the secret of the causation of life may be discovered—that it may be possible to find the formula which will open the door to the creation of new living things.

Some years ago a scientist described to the British association experiments which he believed tended to prove that new life had been created in a test tube, but critics suggested that there was some flaw in the proceedings—that the spark of life had crept in unobserved and had not been created.

Efforts are now being made to arrive at the point of discovery along the road of chemistry—to discover the exact combination of oxygen, nitrogen and so forth, that goes to make up the germ of life.

One scientist is already said to have made "synthetic eggs"—that is, to have compounded substances which had the taste of eggs, and it is claimed that real hens' eggs in an infertile state—incapable of developing into chickens—will, if treated with lithium chlorida, manifest the signs of life and undergo development for a few days. These infertile eggs, fertilized with lithium chloride, have not yet produced chickens—after a few days the development stops—but hope is not abandoned that the secret of introducing effective life into an infertile egg by chemical means may be found. The starting of life in frogs legs has also been contrived, merely by pricking a hole in them, but here also the process of life stops after a few hours.

NEED 350,000 HOUSES A YEAR

Housing Expert Urges Civil Engineers to Spread Construction Over Ten Months.

New York.—From 350,000 to 400,000 new houses are needed in the United States every year, John M. Gries, chief of the division of housing of the Department of Commerce, told the American Society of Civil Engineers.

There are now 20,000,000 dwellings in the United States, he said, of which 11,000,000 were in rural districts. He urged the distribution of the peak of new construction over ten months of the year instead of concentrating it in six or seven months as at present. He suggested standardizing types of dwellings for purposes of economy.

COUNTY TO GET SCHOOL MONEY

Apportionment Exceeds By Over $133,000 That Of Last Year

Pennington County's share of the March school apportionment made public this week by the state department of education, is $8,208.00. The distribution is on the basis of $2.70 per pupil, with a total credit of 3040 pupils for the county.

This apportionment of state school funds, warrants for which are now being prepared by R. P. Chase, State Auditor, is the largest March apportionment in the history of the State. In all 461,522 pupils will participate and a total of $1,246,347.20 will soon be distributed by the various county treasurers among the school districts designated by the state department of education. The present March apportionment exceeds by over $133,000 that of last year, at which time $1,112,680.80 was distributed. The allotment was on the basis of $2.50 per pupil with 455,342 pupils participating.

Distribution of state school funds is made in March and October of each year. The money is obtained by the imposititon of a one mill tax and the income from the permanent school fund.

Naplin Is Candidate

At the League convention held at Thief River on Friday, March 10th, Senator O. A. Naplin of that city was accorded the honor of being unanimously chosen as a candidate at the coming election for re-election to the state Senate to represent the 65th district which is composed of Pennington, Red Lake and Clearwater countys. In accordance with wishes of the convention, Senator Naplin filed as a candidate this week.

Miners To Strike

Soft coal miners in eastern and southern coal fields will go out on strike April first according to present plans. Representatives of men are unable to come to any agreement on wage scale with the mine owners. Should the strike take place and be continued for any lengh of time, there is danger of coal shortage forthis part of the country next winter.

M. R. Hage was at Thief River between trains, Tuesday.

Knute Bjerkness Dies

Knute Bjerkness, a former resident of this village during the mill days, and who will be remembered by those who lived here during that period, died Friday March, 3rd at a hospital at Battlefort, Sask., Can. Mr. and Mrs. Bjerkness and family removed from here to Sayre, Minn., and later from there to Cando, Sask., which has been the family home sincee. Mr. Bjerkness was taken ill with a mastoid trouble some time ago and submitted to an operation which was appparently successful. He became well enough to go home and was doing nicely when the same trouble recurred which necessitated a very delicate operation from which he failed to rally. Besides his widow and several children he leaves a brother at Gonvick, and a number of relatives in Norway to mourn his untimely end. Sympathy of many friends in St. Hilaire is extended to the bereaved family in their sad loss.

Change In Firm

In a deal made last week, William Crown sold his interest in the mercantile business conducted under the name of Crown & Larson to Mr. Tom Larson, a brother of Rick Larson. The firm will hereafter be known as Larson Bros. and they will continue carrying the same lines at the same stand as heretofore. Mr. Crown has not as yet made any plans, but will continue to reside here until spring at least.

Election Quiet

Very little interest was taken in the annual village election or in the elections in adjoining townships this year.

Few changes are reported from any of the townships. In the village there were no filings so consequently a blank ballot was used which resulted in return of all present officers for another year.

Mr. Lars Loberg and daughter, Mable, were at Thief River between trains yesterday.

Elmer Hanson, who is employed at Thief River, came down last evening for a short visit at home.

Victor Brink was reported seriously ill first of this week but later reports state he is recovering.

W. A. Holmstrom returned yesterday from a trip down in southern Minnesota.

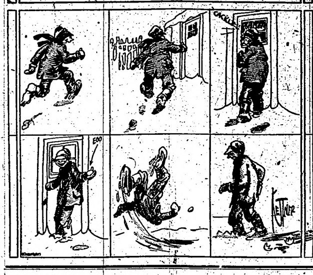
The End of a Perfect Day



25 Years Ago

Rain fell here that day.

John Barton came in from Plummer's dam to work at the mill.

A. C. Holden and wife came from Crookston to make their home here.

Due to heavy snows, there was no train on this line for twelve days.

Ellis Lundy came from Minneapolis to keep time for the mill construction crew.

Over fifty men were employed at the different phases of mill construction work.

Will Peters and family returned from Angus where Will had completed teaching a term of school.

The first annual ball of the local M. W. A. lodge was given the previous Friday. Landlord Arthur served the supper.

A false alarm of fire was turned in from the American House. A belching chimney at the doctor's place next door was cause of the excitement.

Jim Hill was threatening dire happenings to those who persisted in using his tracks from here to Thief River as a drive road. The snow was packed so hard by that kind of travel that it was necessary to plow it with breaking plows before trains could run up the line.

Tim Ensrud returned Saturday after a visit with relatives at St. Thomas N. Dak.

Married Yesterday

Yesterday afternoon at Thief River Falls occured the marriage of Mr. Joe King, son of Mr. and Mrs. John King of this village, to Miss Ella Huseby, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. Huseby of Rocksbury. The ceremony was witnessed only by intimate friends of the contracting parties. Both bride and groom are well known young folks in this vicinity, and both have a host of friends who join in wishing them a long and happy married life.

They will make their home on the Sherer farm where they will be at home to their friends within a short time. The Spectator joins with others in extending congratulations.

Berg—Iverson

Last Sunday at Thief River Falls occured the marriage of Miss Louise Berg, daughter of Mrs. Anna Berg, to Mr. Iver Iverson. The ceremony was preformed by Rev. T. E. Swerger of the Trinity Lutheran church. Both Mr. and Mrs. Iverson are well known locally, and they have a large circle of friends who join in extending congratulations and best wishes.

After a short trip, they will return to make their home on the Berg farm northeast of this village.

Dance Postponed

The St. Patrick's Day dance scheduled for Friday night this week has been postponed indefinately. A number of cases of influenza in neighboring towns is responsible for taking this action by the dance management.

Misses Hulda Odegaard and Clara Fellman, who attend school at Crookston, were home for a short visit last week-end.

Erick Klemsrud came yesterday from Crookston to look after matters in connection with his farm property southeast of town.

K. O. Gigstad and Gust Erickson were at Thief River yesterday with the election returns from St. Hilaire and River Falls respectively.

Mr. and Mrs. Hutcheson, who had visited at John Domstrand home, left Tuesday for their home at Grand Fork.

WARNS FARMERS NOT TO PLUNGE

T. M. McCall Says Efficient Producing Will Bring Better Returns.

Urging farmers to grow into the potato producing business and not plunge into it, T. M. McCall, horticulturist at the Northwest experiment station at Crookston, declares that many farmers, especially in the Red River valley, are planning to go into potatoes extensively this season. Advising concentration on fewer acres with resulting higher yields, Mr. McCall asserts that the man who will make money this year is the man who produces efficiently.

The acreage to be planted should depend on the type of soil and facilities with which the man has to work, Mr. McCall says. He advocates the use of the best available land put in the best possible condition; use of high quality seed; treatment of seed, which produces larger yields and stock of better quality; the use of a high pressure spray outfit capable of maintaining a pressure of at least 150 pounds, planting of the potato seed four inches below the surface of the ground, and giving the necessary time and attention to cultural practices.

Road Costs Down

Minnesota is getting better value for its road money this year than ever before. State Highway officials so agreed this week after contracts were let at $756,000.00 on 13 projects which were estimated by engineers to cost $1,020,000.00. Commissioner Babcock, after making the awards, expressed regret that trunk highway funds will not permit the state to take special advantage of existing of low prices by greatly enlarging the 1922 program.

Representatives of the Standard Oil Company were here Tuesday this week arranging to put in storage tanks to take care of their business at this point.

In the district declamatory contest held at Thief River last Friday evening to select a boy and girl to represent this district in the state contest, Roseau and Greenbush high schools were awarded first place.

Experiments made by the United States forest service have demonstrated that thoroughly air-dried timber has about double the strength of green timber. Moreover, in order effectively to apply preservative agents to timber, it must be first seasoned, because it is very difficult to inject antiseptics into the green wood. The loss of weight by seasoned timber is quite surprising. Western pine loses half its weight after three to five months [illegible].—Washington Star.

One Down, Two to Play

By FREDERICK HART

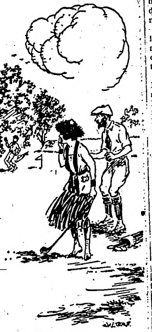
©, 1922, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

Marion Collins, all her friends agreed, was a thoroughly nice girl. They even added that she was one of the prettiest girls they knew. Thus far nothing but praise, but when the subject of golf came up they merely shook their heads and changed the subject. For, if the truth must be told, Marion was not a golf player. She had joined the Country club with all the enthusiasm of her twenty-two years and bought a new and shiny set of clubs and many, many balls, but clubs and balls do not make a golfer. She was, as one of her friends put it, "as wild as mountain scenery." Her drives went almost anywhere except where she wanted them to go. Her approaches were never near the cup, and her putting was fearful and wonderful to behold. But in spite of all this Marion stuck at the royal and ancient game like a Trojan. If persistence could have accomplished it she would have been national champion.

Alas, as many would-be golfers will rise to testify, it takes more than persistence to make a player. Marion remained in the "dub" class, which at least she beautified with her presence, if she did not dignify it with her game.

The practice tee at the Country club to which Marion belonged was well off the course, amply far enough to let the wildest duffer practice for all he was worth without unduly imperiling the lives and limbs of members who were playing, but the distance was not so great that—well, this is what happened.

"Ye ha'e a fine swing—a fine swing!" said Andrew MacAndrew, the professional, as he took Marion on for her daily instructions. "A bonnie, sweet swing—if ye'd ever hit the ba'!" Professionals are a privileged class. "Noo, try it again, an' this time keep yer e'e on the ba'; dinna look at the hole; time enough for that when ye're somewhere inside hittin' distance. Noo, slow back, dinna press, keep yer e'e on the——"



Fell Like a Log.

Marion's pet driver described a flashing double arc; there was a puff of sand, a sharp click and the ball sped true, with all the power of Marion's slim young arms behind it; but, horror of horrors! exactly at right angles with the intended course and with a vicious slice to help its misdirection. A wail of agony came from MacAndrew; it was the worst ball driven from the practice tee that year. Then his agony changed to consternation, for out from behind some low bushes on the tenth fairway, which was parallel to the practice tee, stepped a young man in modish tweeds squarely into the path of the flying ball.

"Fore!" bellowed Andrew MacAndrew, and "Fore!" echoed Marion, but too late. The young man turned to dodge, but the ball struck him. He threw up his hands, spun half around and fell like a log.

Any one who has ever been hit by a golf ball will substantiate the statement that it is no joke. There was real horror in Andrew MacAndrew's face as he ran toward the prostrate victim, and Marion was white with fear. The young man lay without moving. The two stooped over him, to be joined in a moment by the young man's caddie, and the three between them managed to turn him on his back. His eyes were closed, but at the movement they opened.

"What—where—who?" he said.

"A ba'," replied the literal MacAndrew. "A ba'—on the head, most like—this young lady."

"Oh, how can I ever apologize?" cried Marion. "I'm dreadfully sorry; I just couldn't help it—I'm going to stop golf forever!"

The young man struggled to a sitting posture.

"Please don't stop on my account," he begged earnestly. "Accidents will happen. [illegible] that's [illegible]"

"No," mourned Marion, "but there's one golfer living that's crooked all the time, and that's me! I'm going to stop the game."

The young man appeared interested. "If what you say is true—I'm glad to have made your acquaintance," he said; "because I thought I was the only living person who was never on the course. Most people, you know, are straight some times. I never am. Isn't that true, Mr. MacAndrew?"

MacAndrew, recalled to the present by this question, made haste to pour oil on the waters in his own peculiar way.

"It's quite true, Miss Collins," he said hastily. "This young mon plays worse than you do. Though," he added, to soothe the sting of his remark, "I wadna think such a thing possible—my stars! What am I sayin'? I meant—no, no!—I was aboot to say—"

The young man, now apparently quite recovered, laughed.

"Never mind, Mr. MacAndrew. We both know what you wanted to say. And now I think you might present us. It isn't often that the two worst players on the course get a chance to meet."

"Ye're right," said MacAndrew, heartily, glad of a chance to cover up his unfortunate remark. "Miss Collins, this is Mr. Hemingway. Miss Collins is one o' my star pupils."

"I'm glad to meet you, Miss Collins," said the young man gravely.

* * * * * * * *

The summer drew to an end and on a glorious September day Andrew MacAndrew stood on the practice tee watching two persons play down the tenth fairway. "Down the fairway" is merely a technical way of putting it; neither of them was actually anywhere near it. Andrew MacAndrew sighed.

"The two warst duffers o' the club," he soliloquized. "An' there they go, tearin' up the turf—my word! What an awfu' swing!" He closed his eyes and groaned as he watched. "Aweel," he remarked, philosophically, as the pair disappeared in the depths of a bunker, their usual haunt while making the round, "I'm thinkin' it's no so bad. They're main weel suited to each ither. Now I suppose they'll no be comin' oot o' yon pit till they're driven forth. Engaged couples ha' no manner o' right on the course."

Andrew was right. The pair stayed in the pit a long time. Said Marion, after the usual kisses had been interchanged, "Harold, dear, I can never be too thankful that that ball hit you!"

"Neither can I, sweetheart," replied Harold. "And listen while I tell you a secret. I wasn't hurt at all that day! I saw you drive, and I'd wanted to meet you for weeks, and the ball looked like a heaven-sent chance, so I pretended to be knocked out."

"You bad, bad boy!" Due punishment was inflicted. Then Marion whispered: "I have a secret, too. I knew you weren't hurt!"

"What!"

"I saw the ball fly past you—and you fell, and—and, well, I thought—"

But she never said what she thought, for her lips were otherwise engaged at the moment.

LOVE CHANGED POSTAL LAWS

Youth's Unwelcome Letters Said to Have Paved the Way to the Present-Day Stamp.

In the old days, long before stamps were thought of, it was always the custom for the recipient of a letter to pay the postage. The way in which this came to be altered is curious.

A young man in London fell violently in love with a girl who lived a short distance from the metropolis, relates Everyday Science. But the attentions of the ardent lover were not desired, and the maiden had no wish to receive letters from him, much less to pay for them. After a few had been accepted, and, of course, paid for, the girl informed the postman that she would not receive any more. This thing set the postman thinking, and, as a result he made a suggestion to the authorities. This was that it would save a lot of trouble if the sender of a letter were made to pay the postage. So the idea was adopted, and as a result today everyone who sends a letter takes it for granted that he must pay for its delivery in advance.—Kansas City Star.

"Not Worth a Rap."

If we toss something contemptuously aside, or discard an idea with the exclamation, "It isn't worth a rap," we mean that we do not place any value on it. The term originated in Ireland in the early part of the Eighteenth century. Coins at that time were scarce and the government issued the "rap," a base half-penny, intrinsically worth only half a farthing. People continually ridiculed the "rap" and gradually came to compare everything of little value to that tiny coin. In Switzerland, at one time, there was a coin current called a "rappe," worth about one-seventh of one cent.

An Eye to Winter Cheer.

The marriage of Uncle Jimmy Rafferty was a matter of great surprise to his friends, especially since the widow Dolan, whom he had begun suddenly to court only a few weeks ago, lacked personal charm and possessed a waspish disposition. "What was it, uncle," ventured an old crony, "that induced you to let go of your bachelor privileges at your time of life, and—uh—what influenced your choice?" Uncle Jimmy was silently reflective, as if exploring his mind. Then he answered [illegible] "She['ll] a good fat [illegible] the winter."—Youth's Com[illegible]

Indians Thrived in the Cold.

If the dwellers in eastern and central Canada find the severe cold of our brief periods of low temperatures somewhat a hardship, how was existence tolerable, even possible, to the Indians when they had to depend wholly upon themselves for even the bare means of subsistence? How did they get through the winter at all? The question is suggested when our conditions of life are contrasted with theirs.—Montreal Family Herald.

MAY CONQUER SAHARA

French to Try New Method of Crossing Desert.

Fairy-Wheel Motors Have Been Tested on Snowy Slopes of Mont Revard and Left Only Slight Impress.

Paris.—A government expedition will attempt to cross the Desert of Sahara from Tuggurt to Timbuctoo in automobiles with caterpillar wheels so light they will pass over the shifting sands, leaving only the slightest impress.

Success will mean a great step in the advance of civilization. It would make possible the linking up of vast stretches of the world hitherto undeveloped, because making road or rail communications was too costly and hazardous.

China has both eyes on the French experiment, realizing what it would mean to that land of few roads and vast spaces.

It would permit the linking up of the French colonies in North Africa with those of equatorial Africa, which has unceasingly been striven for with various forms of locomotion. When the automobile became a commercially possible means of travel, attempts were made to establish regular service across the sands of equatorial Africa. It was thought that the pneumatic tire would triumph where the solid wheel was impossible. But the experiments of twenty years ago were an utter failure. With the rubber "bitten" into holes by the grit, or the whole machine engulfed in the drifts, not a single car reached its destination, most of them being abandoned in the open desert.

Efforts to develop communication by airplane met with some success, but hope for the future is now almost wholly based on automobile service made feasible by the Kegresse-Hipstin wheel or propeller, as the experts prefer to call it, with its remarkable distribution of weight of 100 grams per square centimeter. In experiments last winter on the snowclad slopes of Mont Revard the car passed over deep "pockets" with little more wrinkling of the face of the snow than would have been caused by a pair of snowshoes. Climbing capacity was proved on the steep sides of the Paris fortifications.

When the cross-Sahara expedition sets out in January the wheels will not be fitted to ordinary automobiles from the Citroen factory (the French Ford). There will be twelve cars, each having a tank to hold fifty gallons of gasoline and each trailing a tank-reservoir holding 150 to 200 gallons. This supply is calculated to be sufficient to enable the party to cover the 1,800 miles from Tuggurt to Timbuctoo, without revictualling, at the rate of 120 miles a day, making fifteen days for the complete journey.

The scheme has been developed by the War Minister and the Colonial Minister. The party will include representatives from these state departments and three scientists, representing the Department of Public Instruction, one a geologist. To make the results known to the world, invitations will be extended to a novelist, a journalist and a movie man.

Freshman—When I first saw you I smiled. Senior.— That's nothing, when I first saw you I laughed out loud.

A sophmore was heard to say in the hall the other day, "If war is what Sherman said it was, what is Geometry?"

After this, Victor Erickson requests that the jokes all be written on tissue paper so that the rest can see thru them.

When you see a bashful senior,
Flushing scarlet in the face
Every time he pulls his watch out,
There's a woman in the case

Everybody works but the teachers
And they just sit around
Putting neat little zeros
Onto a white back ground.
When they ring the class bell
Then there is a fuss
Everybody works but the teachers
And they boss us.

As a sophmore entered a streetcar one day he saw a man leading a monkey by chain. Approaching a senior who sat across from him he asked, "Are monkeys allowed to ride in this street car?" The senior replied, "No, but sit down and I don't think they'll notice you."

GUM CHEWING

Gum chewing should be allowed by the school of St. Hilaire for the following reasons:- 1. It exercises the jaws so that when a person has chewed gum he can get up and tell his thoughts without having his jaws fall asleep. 2. Some pupils get very thirsty and chewing gum would save them many trips to get a drink. 3. The school could sell the gum and then have more money in the treasury.

He was only a little freshie
And very green at that
So no one ever imagined
There was anything 'neath his hat
Everybody laughed at him
He was scorned at where he went
But one day he surprised them all
And became a senior.
So don't make fun of the freshies
But take this good advice
You hurt their feelings badly
And besides it isn't nice.

A green little Sophie
On a bright summer day
Ate some chemicals mixed
In a green little way
And now the green grasses
Tenderly wave
O'er the green little Sophie's
Green little grave.

AIRPLANES SAVE RICE FIELDS

Saying That "There Is Nothing New Under the Sun" May Soon Have to Be Revised.

A fleet of five airplanes is now in service in the California rice fields to ward off the invasion of the great flocks of wild ducks that descend every fall from the northland, writes Frederick Hall in St. Nicholas. As the colder weather approaches, these migratory birds make their way in a bee line for the rice fields of California in Glenn and Colusa counties. Here they find that a warm reception awaits them from the giant airplanes. Like hungry hawks bent on extermination, these flying machines swoop swiftly down over the rice fields, driving out the water fowl that have already settled and keeping traveling flocks on their way or driving them off to other feeding grounds. These planes operate both by day and night, and in the course of a season frighten away myriads of birds. Of course, some of these may come back, but the pilots see to it that they are kept well stirred up and their existence made as uncomfortable as possible as long as they tarry in the vicinity of the rice fields.

HIS EYES POP OUT

THE AMUSING WAITER

Young William Leeds, the American millionaire, who, like his mother, has married into royalty, was joking with a group of American correspondents at Spencer house, his London residence.

"London is nicer," he said, "since the disappearance of the German waiter. The English waiter is very much more amusing. He's so critical, so superior, you know.

"I was lunching at Claridge's one day when a profiteer or some such person strutted in, took a table next to mine, knotted a huge white napkin around his neck, and then tapped his knife on his glass for a waiter.

"An English waiter hurried forward, winked at me in passing and said in a loud voice to the profiteer: '[illegible]'"

OF INTEREST TO AMERICA

An American educator has been trying to buy, as a Franco-American memorial, a building that few Americans ever heard of, though it has been called the "baptismal font of America." It is the house in St. Die, on the Meurthe river, about six miles from the old German frontier, in which in 1507 the name of America was first put on the printed page and engraved on the map.

Indians Get "Sacred Dirt."

Albuquerque, N. M.—Something brand new in the line of tribal superstitions has just been discovered among the Acoma Indians. Each year the tribe makes a pilgrimage to the peak of Mount Taylor, 11,380 feet high, where each tribesman and his squaw fills earthenware jars with "sacred dirt," to be carried back to their pueblo, 60 miles away. Earth from a certain area at the peak of Mount Taylor is believed by the Acomas to possess medicinal and supernatural qualities.

Spot Removing.

One of the secrets of successful "spotting" or stain-removal is to have plenty of pad underneath the spot to absorb the liquid that is used to remove it, and to employ a circular motion, working from the outside toward the center of the spot in order to keep a ring from forming. Change the pad as it becomes soiled, and pat the spot gently until the cleaner evaporates. Certain spots with color in them, such as a black grease spot, come out more easily if turned face down on the pad so that the spot can be carried out without passing through the fabric.

Metaphysics.

The second great discovery of the Greek thinkers was metaphysics. Nowadays metaphysics is revered by some as our noblest effort to reach the highest truth, and scorned by others as the silliest of wild goose chases. I am inclined to rate it, like smoking, as a highly gratifying indulgence to those who like it, and as indulgences go, relatively innocent.—Prof. J. H. Robinson, in "Mind in the Making."

Squaw-Flower.

A variety of trillium is called squaw-flower. It is also called bath-flower, birth-root and three-leaved nightshade. This dark trillium grows coarse and rank compared to the wake-robins. The blossoms are a dull red, with white stamens. The leaves are much larger than those of the painted trillium, though the general shape is the same—a diamond design.

We're the class of jolly eighth graders
Who all love the dear old school
Who does what ever told to
And never break the rule
We're the class that sell the candy
Where all may get some, yum-yum!
So all the other classes
Say we are a dandy bunch.
We work for good athletics
Basket ball and base ball too
And musia seems to always make us
Always wish to dare and do
Our aim's the very highest
Our colors blue and gold
Our yell is sure a rowser
For our class will always fight.

WILL HAVE DRY ROADS EARLY

Maintenance Forces Ordered To Begin Spring Work

Trunk route maintenance men in this and all other sections of the state this week received instructions from the state highway department to push work on the so-called Babcock roads in the spring break-up and put them in condition as soon as possible after the thaws. Culverts and waterways must be cleared and kept open, the business-like instructions state. Drifts in cuts which otherwise might remain several weeks after the remainder of the route is passable must be removed. All reasonable expense to secure dry roads on the earliest possible date is authorized. Spring work well in hand, nearly 1,000 trunk route patrolmen will return to their work for the second season. There is a patrolman, equipped with team, or tractor, grader, drags and other machinery and tools, for each 5-mile stretch and his work is to continually smooth and mend the road. The patrolman has orders that he is working for any highway user who has need of his help and must give the assistance without special compensation.

Credit for spreading early benefits of the new highway improvement plan to all sections of the system was given in big measure last year to the maintenance forces which continually smoothed the roads. The patrolmen living on or near their routes were recruited in less than 60 days and the great majority got good resuts, according to general reports. Highway officials said that some changes to secure greater efficiency have been made and the patrol army is counted on this year to "hit the ball" in great style.

Win At Plummer

The city basketall team journeyed over to Plummer last Saturday evening to substitute for the city aggregation of Mahnomen who were to play Plummer that evening but were unable to fill their date. The locals won the contest by a score of 45 to 17. The Plummer lads were but recently organized but they put up a good battle in spite of the heavy odds against them.

Walt Arthur Writes

The Spectator is in receipt of a letter from W. A. Arthur, who now resides at Rose Lake, Idaho, in which he states there has been more snow out in that country this winter than he ever saw in his many years of residence in Minnesota but no very cold weather was experienced. He and family are doing well and prospering, and they send greetings to all old friends in this village and vicinity. In remitting for the Spectator another year, Mr. Arthur mentioned the fact that this was his thirtieth annual renewal, he having been a constant subscriber since the spring of 1892.

Gummer Begins Life Term

Bismarck, N. D., March 20.—Protesting his innocence, William Gummer, Fargo hotel clerk, entered the state penitentiary at noon Sunday to begin serving a life sentence for the murder of Marie Wick, 18 years old, of Grygla, Minn., in the Prescott hotel at Fargo on June 7, 1921. Gummer was brought here from Valley City. He talked almost continuously about the case on his way, and, declaring that the "murder will out," expressed the conviction that some day he will be freed.

Basketball Friday

The Thief River Falls high school basketeers will be here tomorrow evening for a return game with the local high school quint. The visitors have made a very fine record in their conferennce games this season. The locals won from Newfolden who held Thief River down to a one point win, so the teams should be evenly matched. As this is most likely the last game this season, a good turnout is desired.

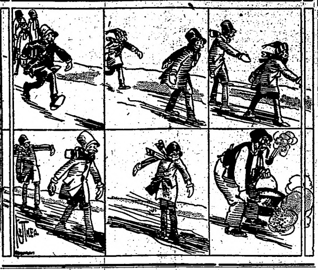
Finds Location

W. A. Holmstrom, who with his family, has spent the winter here since selling out a furniture business at Detroit, has found an opening for a hardware, furniture and undertaking business at Cambridge, Minn., and has arranged to locate there. He leaves this week to arrange for opening the store and to get things in readiness for his family who will join him in a short time. Numerous friends in St. Hilaire wish him success in his new venture.

Coal Strike April 1st

Settlement of the controversy between mine operators and miners over wage agreement went glimmering this week with issuance of strike orders by union heads. The strike will start April 1st. Precautions are being taken by the miners to prevent any damage being done to the mines so they will be in shape to operate immediately after the strike is settled.

The End of a Perfect Day



25 Years Ago

It had rained for two days and looked springlike.

Mrs. Mary Kyle was called home by serious illness of her father.

The new county bridge was nearly finished.

About fifty men were at work raising the frame for the sawmill.

Mrs. R. Aimer had the misfortune to accidently break an arm.

Miss Emma Brink came from Grand Forks for a visit with her brothers.

Miss Harris was substituting in the primary room during absence of Miss Kyle.

A pile driving crew had put down over two miles of piling in the pond and up the river.

A homesteader named Knute Libek lost his right foot as a result of being run over by the train here. He was bound for Fisher and was very much intoxicated. In changing trains here he imagined the train was going to pull out without him, and attempted to board it while it was in motion with result above stated. He was taken to Red Lake Falls when it was found necessary to amputate the limb just above the knee.

Co. Supt. of Schools, Geo. Gunderson, was here Friday enroute from a visit to schools east of town to visit the Aubol school north of the village.

The Local Field

A fall of wet, soggy snow Friday night was evidence that winter can still be expected even though the snow has dissappeared.

The Misses Lulu Allen and Myrtie Rundquist come down from Lancaster and visited last week-end at the home of the former's parents, Mr. and Mrs. H R. Allen.

Gerald Stephens completes his school work at Crookston on March 30th, when the fourteenth annual graduating exercises of the Northwest School of Agriculture will be held. There are 45 members, 30 young men and 15 women, in the graduating class this spring.

Bonus Bill Is Up

The Soldiers' Bonus bill is occupying attention of congress this week. Certain interests are opposed to the bill in its present form, and it is not finding favor with President Harding. An attempt will be made to pass it under suspension of rules which eliminates amendments or alteration of the bill.

Levels Are Approved

According to information received by C. G. Selvig from Chas. H. Burke, commissioner of Indian Affairs, Washington, D. C., the secretary of the Interior on March 9 approved the Red Lake level and control plan with reference to the Red Lake Drainage and Conservancy project. In view of this action the drainage board is now in position to proceed with the work according to the plans. Viewers have already been appointed. The final plans are being rushed and will doubtless be completed within sixty days. The final court hearing will follow the adoption of the plans by the board.

No Spring Flood

There will be but little water in the drainage ditches this spring despite the heavy rainfall first part of this month. Snow has disappeared from the fields but there are still some large drifts in the woods and brush, the water from which will seep away gradually causing no flooding of ditches. Unless there should be heavy spring rains before the frost is all out, this will be a comparatively dry spring.

Schedule Game

The Crookston Independent basketball team, who have cleaned up everything in this part of the state, and who came near annexing the state championship have scheduled a game with the fast 151st Artillery team of Minneapolis who took the state championship honors this year. The game will be played at the Crookston Armory on Saturday evening this week.

Weborg-Larson

Pender, Neb., March 18.—The marriage of Mr. Geoge Weborg and Mrs. Tyra Larson took place Thursday afternoon at the Mission church parsonage. The ceremony was performed by Rev. O. F. Koch. The couple were attended by Mr. Fred Weborg and Miss Emily Johnson. The groom is a well known young man and supervisor of Cleveland township. The bride came to Cuming county from Chicago, Illinois, about a year and a half ago. She has been school teacher for five years in Minnesota, her native state, and for some time secretary in the Mission convent office Chicago, Illinois. They are going to housekeeping on the groom's farm southeast of Pender. The best wishes of many friends are extended to them for a long and happy life together.

Sunday movies were voted out by special ballot in the village election at Fertile last week.

BIG SUM SAVED FOR DAIRYMEN

Farmer Organizations Win Fight To Block Increase Of Freight Rates

Prompt action by two farm organizations has saved the farmers of Pennington county $1,992, by forestalling an increase in freight rates on dairy products. Railroads serving this territory proposed to make shippers of perishable products pay the cost of icing, when shipments were in less than carload lots, according to information from the state farm bureau offices. It is estimated that this extra expense would have increased the cost of marketing the countys' dairy products by approximately 12 per cent. This county produces 830,195 pounds of butter every year. It is estimated that 80 per cent of the butter produced in Minnesota is marketed on the big terminal markets of the east, and that the average freight rate is 2½ cents a pound on less-than-carlots. On this basis, the freight bill paid by this county on butter every year amounts to $19,924. An increase of 12 per cent on less-than-carlot shipments would have added $1,992 to this amount. In the case of the 4 co-operative creameries in the county, it would have meant a direct reduction in net income and a direct loss to their patrons.

Throwing the cost of refrigeration charges on the shippers, they said, would force the co-operative creameries of Minnesota to pay $204,000 a year more to ship their butter to market. The practical value of farm organizations was demonstrated this week, when the Minnesota Farm Bureau federation received a telegram from its national organization, stating that the railroads' committee had decided to abandon the proposed increase, at least for the present.

Even if this proposed increase is revived and put into effect in 1923, the fact that it has been blocked at the present time means $200.000 to Minnesota dairy farmers this year.

Only Two Piles of Ashes

After years of saving, he had built a house for his wife and two little children.

The house burned the day before they moved in.

Not daunted, but in high spirits, the family set up housekeeping in the garage.

An agent tried hard to insure the husband, but he said that he would not sign an application until the ready money needed for the house to be built at once was all provided for.

Within a short time, the man caught cold and died.

And the wife sold the lot and the garage to pay the cremation expenses.

The ashes of the house and husband are all that are left to the widow who faces the world as home-maker and provider—twice the job her her husband found difficult to perform.

HAS JOB AS AID TO CUPID

New York Youngster Directs Young Couples How to Reach the Desired Marriage Bureau.

New York is renowned for the large number of unique jobs some of its residents have found for themselves, but here is one job that bids fair to outshine most of the others as regards quaintness. To a Bronx lad of about ten goes the honor for discovering this latest method of gathering the coin of the realm.

This youngster stations himself at the entrance to the Bronx borough hall, at the northwest corner of Crotona park, and waits patiently about for the appearance of young couples. As soon as he spots a couple he approaches and announces "Up one flight." Invariably the shy young man and bashful young lady break out into smiles and the former removes a coin from an openhearted pocketbook and hands it to the youthful Wallingford.

The Bronx marriage license bureau is "up one flight."—New York Sun.

Lucky or Unlucky Number?

There are those who insist that the dread of the number 13 is of modern origin, unknown to the ancients. Certain it is that many years ago there were those who regarded the number as fortunate. Among them was Pope Gregory the Great, who every morning gave a meal to twelve poor persons. One morning Jesus appeared as a thirteenth member of the company, and thereafter 13 was held to be a lucky and blessed number.—New York Tribune.

Isolation Sometimes Good.

Let the incommunicable objects of nature and the metaphysical isolation of man teach us independence. Let us not get too much acquainted. . . . We should meet, each morning, as from foreign countries, and spending the day together, should depart at night, as into foreign countries. . . . No degree of affection need invade this religion. This is myrrh and rosemary to keep the other sweet.—Emerson.

"Come in, Lois," called plain, sensible Miss Buffum.

Lois Parmenter dropped upon her favorite stool, clasping her slim hands about her knees.

"This room is an oasis. How do you manage it? Is it this braided rug or those Turkey red curtains?"

Miss Buffum looked up from the plum-colored skirt she was darning. "I guess it's Dicky-bird," she answered, with an affectionate glance toward a cage which held an aged canary.

"Letters, Lois? No, bad news?"

"The worst."

"Is it from those editors?" Miss Buffum's tone implied that those editors had reached the limit of her forbearance.

"Yes, just listen. This is from the Mirror: 'Sorry to return "Between the Rivers." Your description of river scenery is ripping, but the fiction market is governed by the same laws that govern the codfish market, the law of demand and supply. What our readers want is H. I. and it's up to us to see that they get it. Put more H. I. in your stories, and we'll be glad to print them.'

"Isn't that the limit? Codfish, indeed! This is from the North Star. 'We are returning "Isabella's Garden" with regret. It's total lack of H. I. renders it unavailable for our columns.'"

"But, Lois, if that 'H. I.' is what they want, why don't you put some of it in?"

"I haven't the remotest idea what it is. Do you know, Miss Buffum?"

"Dear, no! I haven't any education."

Miss Buffum seemed to enfold the girl in her womanly sympathy as she might have wrapped her in the old plaid shawl.

"You'll make good, Lois. I liked that garden story. I could smell the pinks. But why didn't Isabella come out herself?"

"She did, once."

"But she didn't stay long."

"She had lots to do. And so have I." Lois sprang up. "Goodbye, Miss Buffum."

* * * * * * *

"Why, Lois! You're bright as the morning. Has something important happened?" cried Miss Buffum, as the girl poised herself on the threshold with eyes alight.

"What do you think? There's a big box in the hall of 'H. I.'"

"Lois Parmenter! How do you know what it's full of? You haven't been boring into it?"

"Certainly not, I didn't have a gimlet. But it says 'H. I.' on it in brass tacks."

"Oh! that stands for 'Harvey Ide.'"

"But why all this packing?" said Lois.

"Loretta's children are down with measles. I'm going by the next train. Will it be asking too much of you to look after Dicky?"

"Miss Buffum! not enough—if you must go."

Miss Buffum packed her shirt waists with a sigh for this negative sort of kindness.

When Lois came in a little late for dinner she noticed an unusual animation in the usual group. The new boarder, vigorous, buoyant, genial, was relating an adventure. The sour-faced Miss Bond was almost smiling, and the anaemic Mr. Hemenway looked actually interested.

"That's a great experience, Mr. Ide," he said.

"Life is full of great experiences," returned Mr. Ide.

Then somebody introduced Lois.

The next morning was Sunday, and Lois and Mr. Ide found themselves alone at breakfast.

"A great morning," he ventured.

"Very much like yesterday, I think."

The conversation languished.

"I write stories," she said abruptly.

"Do you? That must be great."

"Very little, at present. It just came to me that you might help me!"

"Oh! I'd be glad to and we'll take a long walk after church and a longer one after dinner. We'll go every Sunday. Then small boys like Kipling had better keep out of the way."

* * * * * * *

Miss Buffum did not return until spring.

"The blessed little boy!" she cried, as Lois tripped in with Dicky's cage. "Has Dicky been a good bird and not a mite of trouble?"

"He has been a very good bird."

"But you, Lois. You've improved wonderfully. You have a beautiful color."

"I've just come in for a walk with Harvey."

"That's good for you, but what makes you call him Harvey?"

"Because his name isn't Horatio. But sit down a moment, Miss Buffum. This letter won't keep."

Miss Buffum dropped into a chair with an armful of shirt waists, and Lois read.

"'My dear Miss Parmenter— "He That Goeth Forth to Battle" will appear in an early issue. We have accepted it on account of its strong human interest. We shall be glad to have you submit other stories.'"

"You dear child! But I'm not a bit surprised, I knew those editors would come to their senses by spring."

"And the best of it is, we know now what 'H. I.' stands for."

Miss Buffum shot Lois a keen glance over the shirt waists.

"In my opinion it stands for Harvey

Must Reduce Expenses

The local schools are faced with necessity of making a substantial reduction in expense of operation the coming year. Such a condition prevails in practically every school district, similar to the local one, in this part of the state. With income reduced by half, and some cases even more, it is impossible for the average citizen to stand the heavy tax burden necessary to operate the schools under present conditions. How this reduction can be accomplished is more or less a problem. Reducing teachers salaries would help some, but not a great deal. While there should be no reason for paying war wages now, it must be borne in mind that teachers' wages were abnormally low before the war therefore they are not so very much to high now. Some reduction can undoubtly be made in that line but they must be within reason. Operation costs can be pared down in other directions no doubt. Some schools are planning elimination of entire departments in order to save. How to reduce costs and still maintain the usual standard is a hard problem to solve, but there is a general demand for it that must be considered.

Description of the school house as given by a remarkable eighth grader and—overheard by a Freshman. (Don't hold us responsible for any mistakes):

The west side is the entrance to the school-house (if you can't find any other way to get in). On this side you can see the flag pole. It is situated a ways from the sidewalk and another sidewalk leads to it. There are also a great many windows that look out on this side and which are most of the time covered up with curtains. It is also three storied with a chimney going up from the top of one story.

We have a very good school. It has lots of room and teachers. The top is made of tar and sand. The teachers are very nice. There are no windows on the south side except four which are near the ground and the small window which is above these has a bell above it.

GERMAN RAILWAYS

Hugo Stinnes, the German all-around monopolist, has gotten the consent of government to denationalize the railroads after a plan of his own but this he will do only partly. There is much opposition to the plan even among heads of industries as it means the end of paternalism in Germany and the adventure into free business. His plan assigns to the government 51 per cent of the new railroad stocks. Capital is to take 25 per cent and the remaining 24 per cent is to be apportioned among railway employees.

If it takes a six month old woodpecker with a rubber bill one year and 18 days to peck a hole through a cypress log, large enough to make 136 shingles and 23 shingles are worth 93 cents, how long will it take a cross-eyed grasshopper with a wooden leg to kick all the seeds out of a dill pickle.

Her First Love Affair.

I experienced my first love affair when I was thirteen. I had a bicycle, on which I went for a ride with a neighbor boy, and he took quite a liking to me. So he called on me the next Sunday evening. I saw him coming, and slipped behind the door, not wanting to see him. My mother told him I was out, but would be back after a while. He leaned up against the door I was behind and stood there waiting for me to come. I stood it as long as I could, then stepped out from behind the door, exhausted. He never called again.—Chicago Journal.

Lacking Human Sympathy.

Most of us have come across people, otherwise good, but lacking entirely in the softer human qualities. They are austere, feelingless, hard, utterly devoid of sympathy. And, all because they have been denied that gift of affection when they were in the molding. Statistics prove that children from institutions are sadly lacking in affection. It is one of the greatest problems social workers must deal with.—Exchange.

South African Locust Plague.

Locusts in immense swarms which covered the permanent way and brought the engine to a standstill held up a train on the Groaff Reinet line, South Africa, for two hours. Passengers and officials, by sweeping steadily with improvised brooms for two hours, continued partially to clear the line to allow the journey being resumed. The insects were a couple of feet deep in places.

Confidence.

The following scrap of conversation was overheard in a London motor bus, and deeply impressed those fortunate enough to catch the words. Said one fair passenger to another: "Between you and me, I don't seem to like your husband so much as I did." "And between you and me," said the other, "neither do I."—London Morning Post.

STATE DIVIDES HIGHWAY FUND

This County Allotted More Than It Paid In Taxes. Others Also Benefit

Pennington County received $22,000 from the new state road aid fund as apportioned by the state highway board, according to an announcement this week. It is one of the 83 out of 85 counties allotted more than it paid into the aid fund. State Auditor Chase pointed out that the minimum to a county is 32 per cent greater than last year's apportionment with no increase in the tax rate, and as a result the counties will receive hundreds of thousands of dollars more than last year.

The money from this source is for the improvement and upkeep of the most imortant roads in each county other than the so-called Babcock roads on which only trunk highway funds can be used, and it forms a part of a grand total of more than $20,000,000 to be expended this year by counties and townships on the local roads in Minnesota.

The St. Hilaire high school basketeers added another victory to their string last Friday night when they took the Thief River Falls high school quint into camp to the tune of 28 to 16. The visitors came down confident of carrying home the "bacon" but their confidence waned at St. Hilaire took the lead which they maintained seemingly without effort. The machine like work on part of the locals proved to much for the visitors. Their best basket shooter was guarded so closely that he was unable to hit the hoop once during the game. The game was cleanly played, there being but one foul called on the visitors.

PLAN YOUNG PEOPLES' MEET

Rev. C. A. Stormo of Roseau, Rev. A. E. Hanson of Middle River and E. A. Mostue of Thief River Falls came down Monday to confer with Rev. C. M. Grimsrud in regard to a Young Peoples' League convention to be held at Middle River during the summer. Plans were made for a convention of delegates from the leagues in the circuit on Saturday, July 1, and a grand rally on Sunday. Speakers of national prominence will be secured and a rich and varied musical program will be rendered.

All the members of the committee agreed that prospects were bright for a greater and more successful rally than the one held at Greenbush last summer. The present officers of the circuit Y. P. Luther League are; President, Rev. C. M. Grimsrud; Vice president, E. A. Mostue, Thief River Falls; Secretary J. P. Grothe, editor "Times-Region", Roseau; Treasurer, Rev. C. M. Ordahl, Holt

Authorities at Red Lake Falls have issued warning to motorists to observe and obey the laws in regard to speeding within that city. They even go so far as to intimate that there might be trouble for anyone caught "hitting her up."

Electric current users at Red Lake Falls have been offered a special inducement by the Red River Power Co. to use electricity for cooking purposes. The company claims the electric way is as cheap as any fuel using method, and much more conveient. No doubt the same rate will be extended to St. Hilaire if enough users can be

Heavy Snowfall

The old adage about "March comes in like a lamb, and goes out like a lion" has proven true in this part of the country. A rain accompanied by lightning and thunder, last Saturday evening turned into sleet and snow which continued coming down unabated the best part of three days covering the country with a heavy mantle of snow estimated to be from six to eight inches deep. Sleighs and snow shovels are again in evidence as much as at any previous time during the winter. The winter rye crop, of which there is a large acreage in the country, will benefit by the snowfall which will provide covering now, and moisture when the snow thaws.

PIONEER CITIZEN PASSES AWAY

This community lost another of its pioneer citizens last Monday night when Ole Aubol passed away at the home of his brother, Ed Aubol, north of town. Mr. Aubol had been ill with heart trouble for some time, and death was not unexpected as he had had several sinking spells lately.

He was born at Manitowoc, Wisconsin, on October 23, 1871, and was 50 years and five months of age at the time of death. He came to this section of the country in 1879, and for many years has made his home on his farm between here and Thief River Falls. A quiet, unassuming, honest and upright man, he was held in high regard by all who knew him.

Mr. Aubol is survived by three brothers, Ed of this place, Guy at Crookston, and Otto at Big Lake, Minn, and and two sisters. The sisters are Mrs. Dydale at Minneapolis, and the other, Mrs Thompson whose home is in Wisconsin. Another brother, Anton, preceeded him in death a few years ago.

Funeral services will be conducted by Rev. C. M. Grimsrud from the Ed Aubol home at 1:30 today. Interment will be at the Lutheran cemetery adjoining the Aubol farm.

Heartfelt sympathy of the community is extended to the bereaved relatives.

Club Dance Saturday

The local dancing club will give another of their popular "hops" at the Imperial hall next Saturday evening. There has been no dances given here for several weeks owing to the influenza situation which has now improved so there is no danger of a spread of the desease thru public meetings.

A report from the Lake of the Woods district says fifteen inches of snow on the level has fallen there.

COMMUNITY CLUB FRIDAY NIGHT

Excellent Program Will Be Given. Outside Talent Secured For Meeting

The second monthly meeting this spring of the St. Hilaire Community Club which will be held at the high school auditorium Friday night this week, will be marked by an excellent program. Supt. I. T. Simley of the Thief River schools has been secured to deliver an address. His message will be worth coming miles to hear. In addition, Mrs. Fisher of Thief River Falls has consented to favor the meeting with some musical selections. There will be other features also, and lunch will be served after the meeting is over.

No one needs an invitation to attend these meetings They are arranged for the benefit of the people of the community and everybody is welcome.

Crookston Wins

The Crookston Independent basketball team, undisputed champions of northwestern Minnesota, won further laurels last Saturday evening when they met and defeated the 151st Artillery team of Minneapolis on Crookston floor by a score of 31 to 24. The latter team annexed the state championship honors this year, and their defeat by the Crookston team is only the third defeat they have encountered in three years of playing. An enthusiastic crowd of over 800 people witnessed the game.

Grain Boosts Milk Flow

Twenty-one dairy herds in the Blue Earth County Cow Testing association averaged 7,120 pounds of milk and 285 pounds of butterfat per cow in 1920. Nineteen herds in the same association averaged 8,500 pounds of milk and 345 pounds of butterfat per cow in 1921. The percentage of gain in milk in 1921 over 1920 was 19.3; in butterfat, 21. The tester in charge in his annual report to University Farm says: "I attribute this gain to better care and feeding. The cows were fed a grain ration the year round, thus keeping up production during the late summer months when it usually drops because of short pastures."

Only Two Piles of Ashes

After years of saving, he had built a house for his wife and two little children.

The house burned the day before they moved in.

Not daunted, but in high spirits, the family set up housekeeping in the garage.

An agent tried hard to insure the husband, but he said that he would not sign an application until the ready money needed for the house to be built at once was all provided for.

Within a short time, the man caught cold and died.

And the wife sold the lot and the garage to pay the cremation expenses.

The ashes of the house and husband are all that are left to the widow who faces the world as home-maker and provider—twice the job her her husband found difficult to perform.

SMUGGLE DRUGS ACROSS BORDER

Narcotics Are Brought Into Texas From Mexico by Pulley Lines Over River.

FORT WORTH TRADE CENTER

One Person in Every Hundred There, Detective Says, Either Drug User or Seller—Ingenious Methods Employed by Smugglers.

New York.—In his fight against the drug traffic Deputy Commissioner Carlton Simon of the narcotic division at police headquarters has discovered that he and his men are up against a network of organizations, the ramifications of which extend not only outside of New York city, but beyond the borders of the country, across two oceans, embracing Europe, Asia and South America. As soon as he realized the magnitude of his problem the chief of the narcotic squad began a correspondence with other American cities seeking particularly to establish working connections with towns and cities along the Canadian and Mexican borders.

Oil Boom Responsible.

J. A. Riley, in charge of the narcotic division of the detective force of Fort Worth, Tex., is now in New York spending every day and many nights with commissioner Simon's men in their hunt for the drug peddler and his agent, the "booster." Fort Worth, with its 17 converging railroads, is the center of a drug ring working through Brownsville and El Paso over the border into Mexico. Mr. Riley says that there are more than 1,000 addicts and dealers in narcotics and drugs in Fort Worth— a city of only 100,000 inhabitants. This is due, partly, he asserts, to the transient population, caused by the proximity of the oil fields.

"Fort Worth," Mr. Riley declared, "is near the boom country and, like all of the larger towns, it absorbs for the time being the drifters and riff-raff that always flock to a boom region. That, I believe, is why approximately one person in every hundred is either a user or trafficker in drugs.

"The same conditions prevail in the other cities of Texas, and the prevalence of drug addiction is due to the ease with which drugs and narcotics are smuggled over the border. Mexico apparently has no law forbidding their sale. You can buy morphine, heroin and opium in Mexico as you buy cigars or ice cream in this country, and the supply seems to be inexhaustible. It comes to them from Germany and other European countries and Japan, and it even goes over from the United States in large quantities to be smuggled back and peddled in the streets here."

The close relation between drug addiction and crime in Fort Worth bears out the statistics compiled by Commissioner Simon for New York, that more than 60 per cent of all drug addicts are criminals; and the first effect of more rigid restrictions is, strangely enough, an increase in the percentage of criminals among the addicts. Where the police make the traffic difficult the price of the "dope" immediately goes up.

Pay Any Price.

The victim of the drug habit must get his "shot," be the price what it may, and when, as happened in Fort Worth after the 35 days' campaign, morphine goes from $25 an ounce to $180 then the addict will take all sorts of desperate chances to get the money to buy his drug. In this connection Commissioner Simons drew attention to the belief in police circles that the murder of Policeman Daniel Neville in West Thirty-ninth street a few months ago was the deed of a drug addict.

The methods of smuggling opium and other narcotics from Mexico are many and ingenious. The harness of a mule, his ears and tail serve as hiding places for hundreds of dollars worth of contraband drugs. Many a Mexican has earned in one day more than the value of his mule in the service of the smugglers. The Rio Grande is so narrow in places that the smugglers have stretched pulley lines across the river and at night have sent their goods over the American border to confederates on the American side without crossing the line themselves. By comparing notes Commissioner Simon and Detective Riley have come to believe that the Mexican drug ring has agents working in New York. A drive on the drug traffic here is followed by an increase in the number of dealers and the quantity of drugs in Fort Worth.

The same conditions, the commissioner has found, prevail in other parts of the country. There appears to be a well-defined ring working from Canada through the northeast and New York city. Another ring takes in central Canada, lake cities and Kansas City, and between New York and Kansas City the police are convinced that there is a third ring engaged in the narcotic trade.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That default has been made in the conditions of a mortgage executed by Edward Johnson and M. E. Johnson, his wife, mortgagors, to Milo G. Drake and Elsie F. Drake, Mortgagees, dated July 19th, 1918, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Pennington County, Minnesota on the 12th day of December, 1918, at 8 o'clock A. M., in Book 58 of mortgages on page 543 thereof.

That such default consists in the non-payment, when due, of the interest which fell due upon said mortgage on July 19th, 1921, and the non-payment of taxes upon the land covered by said mortgage, and the non-payment of premiums on the insurance policies covering the improvements of said Real Estate, and the non-payment of the interest on prior mortgages according to the terms of said mortgage, and the Mortgagees having been obliged to pay and having paid the sum of Five Hundred Five and 78-100 ($505.78) Dollars as interest on prior mortgages, preimums on insurance policies and cost of foreclosure of prior mortgages.

And, whereas, the said Mortgagees have duly elected to declare and do hereby declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms and conditions of said mortgage and the power of sale therein contained, and, whereas, there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable, at the date of this notice the sum of Forty-three hunored Seventy-six and 42-100 ($4,376.42) Dollars including the insurance and interest on prior mortgages paid aforesaid; that the premises described in and covered by said mortgage are situated in Pennington County, Minnesota, and described as follows: The South East Quarter of the Southeast Quarter (SE¼SE¼) of Section Thirty-three (33); and, the South Half of the Southwest Quarter (S½SW¼); and, the Northeast Quarter of the Southwest Quarter (NE¼SW¼) of Section Thirty-four (34); all in Township One Hundred Fifty-three (153) North, of Range Forty-four (44) West; the South Half of the Northwest Quarter (S½NW¼); and, The South Half of the Northeast Quarter (S½NE(¼), and Lots One (1), Two (2), Three (3) and Four (4) of Section Five (5), in Township One Hundred Fifty-two (152) North, of Range Forty-four (44) West of the Fifth Principal Meridian; that by virtue of the Power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, said mortgage will be foreclosed by the sale of said premises, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, by the Sheriff of Pennington County, Minnesota, at the East Front door of the Pennington County Court House, in the City of Thief River Falls, in said County and State, on the 15th day of May A. D. 1922, at 10 o'clock A. M., to satisfy the amount then due on said mortgage including said insurance and interest on prior mortgages, together with the costs of such sale, and Seventy-five ($75.00) Dollars, Attorney's fees stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and disbursements allowed by law subject to redemption at any time within one year from the date of sale as provided by law.

By the Sophomores

NEWS

The Junior class entertained the 7th and 8th grades very delightfully last Thursday morning during assembly hour. A program consisting of songs, dialouges piano solos was given by the class.

The upper classmen stand rather in awe of the poor little freshies, at least their act a week or so ago, when a group of them in highway robbery style, snatched a pail of ice cream from a young lady rather than attack the young man, leads one to think so.

The Freshman gathered on March 17 for a party and by roundabout reports, the evening was evidently very enjoyably spent. The high school faculty members were the guests of the class. Among those who enjoyed the Freshie's hospitality, we number a group of bandits!

The Sophomores presented their program before the high school on Wednesday. This was the second of a series of programs presented by the various classes during assembly.

JOKES

A little freshie was discovered smashing all the eggs in the house. "Why Freshie, what do you mean by breaking all those eggs?" "I heard papa say that there was money in eggs these days, and I'm trying to find it."

Listening to a Junior is like being at target practice.—Allowence must be made for wind.

Could anyone ever imagine all the Freshmen girls on friendly terms as long as Pearl and Julia can not agree as to who shall be absolute ruler of the class.

Hippy hoop, hippy hoop,
Junior class is in the soup;
Hippy hop, hippy hop,
Sophomore class right on top.

When you're up, you're up,
When you're down, you're down,
When you're up against a Sophomore
You're up side down.

Miss McGinity:—How do you spell needle?" Oscar—"n-e-i-d-l-e-," Miss McGinity—"Wrong there is no "i" in needle." Oscar—"Well, it aint a good needle then."

Gunhild minus Agness equals lonesome
Width minus height equals Leona
Length plus voice equals Margaret
Pocket minus money equals broke
Length minus width equals Howard
Ethel plus boy equals happy
Julia minus George equals stolen ice cream
Wesloh plus Geometry equals knowledge.

Howard came to school one morning with a pretty new collar on. He exclaimed, "I bet you dont know where I got my new collar." The boys after guessing a while gave up. Then Howard said brightly, "Around my neck."

O when you see a streak of green a coming down the street,
You'll know it is a Freshmen before you ever meet.
And when you see a streak of yellow you wouldn't have to look You'd know it was a Junior, for they seldom have a book.
And when you see a spot of blue a
Senior you'll know,
A crying cause they think the've flunked, because their marks are low.
But when you see no colors, only a shinning light, You'll know it is a Sophomore a good and jolly sight.

The Eighth Grade Boomerang

Who's a Who

Who's the girl with look intent
That poses as our president,
The job is easy so she's content,
That's Hazel.
His pride is in his pompadour,
Each day he strokes it more and more;
And envious glances pass galore,
That's Bill.
Here's to the girl with auburn hair,
Her eyes are brown, her skin is fair;
She brings gladness everywhere
That's Mae.
In all her classes she's a shark
Sure to get the highest marks,
But always keeps it in the dark;
That's Marie.

The eighth grade were very much pleased to hear the second Caruso and McCormack sing in the House of Hi-Light last Thursday.

Green Little Freshman

A green little freshman on a fine spring day,
Some chemicals mixed in a green little way,
And now the green grasses so tenderly wave,
O'er the green little Freshman's green little grave.

Pet Sayings

Ruth—Oh, for crazy.
Dorothy—Oh, sure.
Hazel—Oh, such boys.
Arline—Kiss my foot.
Mae—I should smile.
Marie—Oh, I guess so.
Bill—Not me.
Oscar—What do ya mean
Lloyd—How come.
Florence—Aw, shucks.
Louis—Let me see once
Martha—Aw fudge.

The eighth grade had made their debut into society Thursday when they went up to the assembly.

The Juniors gave a splendid program which we were very glad to hear.

Der Hi-Lite

Who is it that wears the cap and goun
Valks round so solumn an looks at the groun;
Thinks he iss "it" but vill hof to come down
Thats the Senior.
Who iss it that wears such a tired look
You might think he had already written the book,
For vich he lost sleep und classes forsook
That's the Junior.
Who is the von ve doan'd hear much about
Just over his greenness und komencing to sprout,
In von more year und he'll be ready to come out
That's de Soph.
Who iss it that walks aroun' with an air which says,
"I'm an Eighth grade grad und ven I vas there
I vas the whole cheese, and ought to be here"
That's the Freshie.

GREAT NORTHERN PLANS BUS LINE

Will Operate Gas Propelled Cars To Better Handle Passenger Traffic

To compete with the motor bus which is making serious inroads into the passenger carrying business, the Great Northern is putting out a number of small cars that will be propelled by a gasoline engine motor. These cars will have a carrying capacity of about 40 passengers besides having a compartment for baggage and express. The first ones to be used in this part of the country will soon be in service between Crookston, Grand Forks and Fargo. They will operate on a two hour schedule and will undoubtedly become popular with the traveling public. The main drawback to the old form of railway passenger train service is that the heavy trains do not operate often enough to make their schedule convenient to the public. With the new cars this feature will be eliminated.

Should the cars prove a paying proposition on the main line, similar ones will be placed on all branches of the system. The idea is not new as it has been advocated a number of years by a builder of popular make of automobiles.

Undergoes Operation

Edwin Roy, accompanied by John Hanson, went Monday night to Grand Forks where Mr. Roy was to undergo an operation for removal of his appendix which had bothered him since a recent attack of influenza. A phone message received here by Mr. Roy's parents yesterday afternoon stated the operation had been preformed and that Ed had rallied nicely and he was getting along fine which is welcome news to his numerous friends in St. Hilaire and vicinity.

Surprise Party

A surprise party was given at the Swan Johnson home Friday evening in honor of Oliver Johnson who has since left for Grand Forks. The evening was spent in music and "tripping the light and fantastic," after which a delicious luncheon was served. Those present were: Florence Dann, Esther Burnquist, Lemley Dobson, Frank and Hattie Johnson, Alvin and Martha Swenson, Mae Kenney, Max, George, Marion and Ivanette Wilson.

New Mail Route

Haupt, Fred Erdman, John Konickson, John Gunstad, Gust Larson, P. J. Gustafson, Fred Ulrich.

Is Honor Student

The Gustavus Adolphus College has just announced the students of honor grade in the class of 1922 Among the names was noted that of Miss Ethel Palmquist who has the honor of receiving the Magna Cum Laude. Miss Palmquist's home is southeast of this village and she has many friends locally who will be pleased to learn of the well deserved honor she has received.

Mrs. F. Dann Entertains

Mrs. Frank Dann entertained a number of friends Saturday in honor of her mother, Mrs. Douglas, who is visiting at the Dann home, and who is leaving soon for Alexandria and other southern Minnesota points. The afternoon was spent in social conversation after which a delicious luncheon was served. Among those present were: Mesdames K. Dalager, D. Johnson, O. Johnson, Ben Johnson, August Swenson, Bothman, E. F. Dann, H. Jepson, W. P. Wilson, Mrs. Dobson and daughter, Anna.

Fine Club Meeting

The Community Club meeting held Friday night was the best attended meeting held this season. Supt. I. T. Simley of the Thief River schools gave a very interesting address on topics of general interest. Mrs. Irma Mallory Fisher, Karl Sundahl and Mrs. Erickson of Thief River Falls, and Miss Dora Holmes of this village rendered a musical program which was easily the best ever given at any club meeting here. This part of the program was greatly enjoyed by all present. The high school glee club also rendered a few selections which were well received. Lunch was served at the close of the meeting. Ralph Stephenson was chosen as chairman to have charge of arrangement for the meeting next month.

Basketball Friday

A basketball game has been arranged between Holt and St. Hilaire to be played here next Friday night. In the last game between these teams St. Hilaire won out by the close margin of two scores. Holt has played and won a number of games since, and they are coming with intention of taking this game. The Holt boys are real red-blooded sports and they have always extended the glad hand to our boys when they have been in their town. As this will most likely be the last game this season, a good turnout is desired as it requires good attendance to meet expenses. Exerybody turn out to help welcome the visitors, and root for the home team.

Files For Sheriff

The first filing for county office in Pennington County was made last week when Bill Crown shied his lid into the political ring as a candidate for the office of sheriff. If well deserved popularity, and a large circle of loyal friends will avail him anything, Bill will make a formidable opponent for the present incumbent, W.J. LaBree, who has held the office since the county was organized.

Avoid "Smoker's Throat."

It is often said that you do not get oil of tobacco in cigars. This is a mistake. The oil is there and is no more burnt away or evaporated than in a pipe. It is drawn to and condensed in the end of the cigar between the lips of the smoker. For this reason cigars should never be smoked to the last inch. Certain connoisseurs will never smoke a cigar more than three-quarters of the way through. Smoking cigars to the bitter end produces "smoker's throat." As soon as a cigar begins to taste bitter, throw [illegible] away.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That default has been made in the conditions of a mortgage executed by Edward Johnson and M. E. Johnson, his wife, mortgagors, to Milo G. Drake and Elsie F. Drake, Mortgagees, dated July 19th, 1918, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Pennington County, Minnesota on the 12th day of December, 1918, at 8 o'clock A. M., in Book 58 of mortgages on page 543 thereof.

That such default consists in the non-payment, when due, of the interest which fell due upon said mortgage on July 19th, 1921, and the non-payment of taxes upon the land covered by said mortgage, and the non-payment of premiums on the insurance policies covering the improvements of said Real Estate, and the non-payment of the interest on prior mortgages according to the terms of said mortgage, and the Mortgagees having been obliged to pay and having paid the sum of Five Hundred Five and 78-100 ($505.78) Dollars as interest on prior mortgages, preimums on insurance policies and cost of foreclosure of prior mortgages.

And, whereas, the said Mortgagees have duly elected to declare and do hereby declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms and conditions of said mortgage and the power of sale therein contained, and, whereas, there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable, at the date of this notice the sum of Forty-three hundred Seventy-six and 42-100 ($4,376.42) Dollars including the insurance and interest on prior mortgages paid aforesaid; that the premises described in and covered by said mortgage are situated in Pennington County, Minnesota, and described as follows: The South East Quarter of the Southeast Quarter (SE¼SE¼) of Section Thirty-three (33); and, the South Half of the Southwest Quarter (S½SW¼); and, the Northeast Quarter of the Southwest Quarter (NE¼SW¼) of Section Thirty-four (34); all in Township One Hundred Fifty-three (153) North, of Range Forty-four (44) West; the South Half of the Northwest Quarter (S½NW¼); and, The South Half of the Northeast Quarter (S½NE¼), and Lots One (1), Two (2), Three (3) and Four (4) of Section Five (5), in Township One Hundred Fifty-two (152) North, of Range Forty-four (44) West of the Fifth Principal Meridian; that by virtue of the Power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, said mortgage will be foreclosed by the sale of said premises, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, by the Sheriff of Pennington County, Minnesota, at the East Front door of the Pennington County Court House, in the City of Thief River Falls, in said County and State, on the 15th day of May A. D. 1922, at 10 o'clock A. M., to satisfy the amount then due on said mortgage including said insurance and interest on prior mortgages, together with the costs of such sale, and Seventy-five ($75.00) Dollars, Attorney's fees stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and disbursements allowed by law subject to redemption at any time within one year from the date of sale as provided by law.

Vivienne Novak: There are too many rooters at the game.
Melvin Sherva: We don't want uny more material for the Hi-Light this week,
Hervy, Leo, Frances ane Clifford: No we dont like ice cream-

We are the freshies of '22
We are always very busy,
The way we study Algebra
Would make mere Seniors dizzy,
We have the swellest parties
And ice cream too, you bet.
We are so generous
That we will even let
Some other people have some
Without their asking too.
They just come round and take it,
You bet they do.
They just come 'round and hold us up
Like highway robbery men,
But we won't get mad we freshies,
Tho it occur again.

Reports are out that the 7th and 8th grades received a severe jolt last Wednesday when the sophomores tried to entertain them with. Such songs as "Little Bo Peep" and 'Jack and Jill" broughth back memories to them of days that used to be when children would delight in such songs.
Memories bring fond recollections.

"It's you, It isn't you school'
If you want to work in the kind of a school,
Like the kind of a school you like;
You needn't slip your clothes in a grip,
And go on a long, long hike.
You'll only find what you left behind
For there's nothing that's really new,
It's a knock at yourself, when you knock your school;
It isn't your school it's you.
Real schools are'nt made by those who desire
By sombody else to be led
When everybody works and nobody shirks,
You can put your school at the head.

Chop Suey

A is for Agnes of Norwegian descent,
In manner genial, on study intent.
B is for Blanche who with laughter
so merry and clear,
In storm or in sunshine can bring us
good cheer!
E for Ethel the source of man's woe,
Still there's hope in her as Normandoth know.
G is for Gunhild with talents artistic
Who views all the world in hues optimistic.
Then the knight errant George appears in the list
A chance to help ladies he never resists.
H is for Harry rather shy in his way
Tis feared that a bachelor he'll be all his days
I is for Ivanette whose face beams with pleasure
When she brings us a letter from one
she doth treasure.
J for Julia whose tendency leans
Towards debating and declaiming and event to extremes.
And also Irving whose manners seem gruff
But when you once know him he's pleasant enough.
P is for Paul to study he's prone Minds his own business, let's others alone.
Next Pearl appears majestic in stature
And liked by all for her jolly good nature.
V is for Victor whom we like to call
Vic, with the girls and the cornet
he is equally slick.
As a finishing touch to Freshmen stew
Add X Y and Z for the great [illegible] they'll do.

Historical Facts

Every class has a slider, a cribber, a sucker, a crammer, a doolittle, a sport, a blockhead, a dude, a rubberneck—Except the Freshmen Class.

Lost—12 cents in a gum machine. Would like to get them back. Art
Found—In my mirror, a fine black mustache. Sigurd Engh.

A sophie.—How long can a mule stand on one leg?
Freshman: Try it and see.

Student's Soliloquy

To flunk or not to flunk,
That is the question.
Whether tis wiser to take the stuff again
And get a thorough knowledge of it,
Or let this sliding be enough
And worry no more o'er it.
At best tis a momentous question,
Too great for mortals to decide.
I guess I'll flunk.

A Favored Spot

The township of River in Red Lake County described by a citizen of that favored spot as a "two-by six" township, which means it contains only twelve sections, is served by four rural free delivery routes. The Hazel, Plummer and two Red Lake Falls routes traverse the township at various places. John Hogquist, who is a native son and an ardent booster for his home township, maintains that the sun shines a little brighter, the grass grows greener, the women folks and girls are the best looking, and the kids are fatter and happier in River than in any other place on earth. All the foregoing is undoubtedly true, as the aforesaid native son is noted as a very keen observer of such things, and no one will attempt to disprove his contention.

TINTERESCO

Costs No More Than Ordinary Kalsomine But Does More-

B. & V. Tinteresco is displacing ordinary kalsomines wherever introduced. It is so much better in appearance and wear that there can be no comparison.

And—it costs no more than the old fashioned semi-satisfactory product.

It never cracks, chips, peels or rubs off when applied on a proper surface and the colors and effects are almost as good as flat wall paint, although, of course, the surface is not washable.

You can use Tinteresco over paint, on varnish or shellac or even on wallpaper, provided the paper is firm and offers a good, smooth, perfect surface.

Try Tinteresco once and you will be an enthusiast.

Comes in a large number of beautiful shades.

Paint Doesn't Cost Money —It Saves It!

Unless your home is protected inside and outside by repainting at least once every four years, you will lose in repairs and lessened value from five to ten times what the paint and labor would cost.

"I don't remember the name of the guy what wrote this book, it wasn't much good anyway. At first the father or somebody told sombeody else that he was going to get something I don't quite remember just what it wuz. Well, anyway, the plot wasn't anything extra. There wasn't any climax that I noticed and the characters were all kinda crazy but—well, I just read the first two chapters But if you wait until next week I'll maybe get a few more read.

High School Girls Looking Like Mary
Oh Leona wants, tho short and fat,
To look like Mary Pickford,
And Margaret wants, tho tall and flat,
To look like Mary Pickford.
And Blanch R. who is very plain
But none the less extremely vain,
Attempts with all her might and main
To look like Mary Pickford.
Oh Alice E. wants tho poppy-eyed,
To look like Mary Pickford,
Hazel wants, (her mouth is wide)
To look like Mary Pickford;
And Pearl, freckled from her birth,
Arousing sympathy or mirth,
Desires above all else on earth
To look like Mary Pickford.
Oh Molly, her figure's squat,
Would look like Mary Pickford,
And Amelia who of curls has naught,
Would look like Mary Pickford,
And Tomina who can't tread a dance
Would live forever in a trance
If one should say, perhaps by chance,
She looked like Mary Pickford.
Altho it may be nice, of course,
To look like Mary Pickford;
It makes girls happy, never cross,
To look like Mary Pickford.
Note my opinion, you who read,
Accept it as my simple creed,
Just be yourself and you'll not need
To look like Mary Pickfrd.

Foot-Mouth Disease

Minnesota farmers are warned by the state livestock Sanitary board to guard against a possible outbreak of foot and mouth disease.

There is a serious outbreak in England. Since January 1, English farmers have had to slaughter 43,735 animals in less than a thousand herds. "It seems possible for the virus to be carried long distance in clothing of immigrant laborers or in hay and straw used for packing crockery and other goods."

Such packing should be burned. Clothing should be fumigated before immigrant laborers are allowed to care for susceptable animals. All who have charge of animals should watch carefully for any symptoms of sore mouth or feet, and report promptly any cases that may come under their observation.

Birthday Party

A dozen or more friends of Hans Wilson were entertained at a card party at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Hanson last Monday evening, the party being given in honor of Mr. Wilson on occasion of his birthday anniversary. A tasty luncheon was served at conclusion of the evenings' playing.

Cannot Stay Retired

Mike McAndress, who sold out his stock and machinery last fall with the intention of taking life easy, has found that having no occupation is too irksome, and he is getting sore from sitting down watching others hustle so has decided to again engage in buying livestock. His announcement to that effect will be found on another page in this issue.

Nationally, the organization now has more than 56,500 members.

Grading Of Cream Urged

Pointing out that cream grading is the surest means of producing good butter, A. J. McGuire, dairy specialist with the university agricultural extention service, adds that eastern markets are scoring butter closer than ever before. "There is real competition," he says, "for the best markets and if cooperative creameries are to hold such markets they must make good butter and see that it is sold as such. A cream cooling tank on every farm makes cream grading easier both for creamery men and for patrons. Are you urging cream cooling and cleanliness of cream seperators? This should precede cream grading.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That default has been made in the conditions of a mortgage executed by Edward Johnson and M. E. Johnson, his wife, mortgagors, to Milo G. Drake and Elsie F. Drake, Mortgagees, dated July 19th, 1918, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Pennington County, Minnesota on the 12th day of December, 1918, at 8 o'clock A. M., in Book 58 of mortgages on page 543 thereof.

That such default consists in the non-payment, when due, of the interest which fell due upon said mortgage on July 19th, 1921, and the non-payment of taxes upon the land covered by said mortgage, and the non-payment of premiums on the insurance policies covering the improvements of said Real Estate, and the non-payment of the interest on prior mortgages according to the terms of said mortgage, and the Mortgagees having been obliged to pay and having paid the sum of Five Hundred Five and 78-100 ($505.78) Dollars as interest on prior mortgages, preimums on insurance policies and cost of foreclosure of prior mortgages.

And, whereas, the said Mortgagees have duly elected to declare and do hereby declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms and conditions of said mortgage and the power of sale therein contained, and, whereas, there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable, at the date of this notice the sum of Forty-three hundred Seventy-six and 42-100 ($4,376.42) Dollars including the insurance and interest on prior mortgages paid aforesaid; that the premises described in and covered by said mortgage are situated in Pennington County, Minnesota, and described as follows: The South East Quarter of the Southeast Quarter (SE¼SE¼) of Section Thirty-three (33); and, the South Half of the Southwest Quarter (S½SW¼); and, the Northeast Quarter of the Southwest Quarter (NE¼SW¼) of Section Thirty-four (34); all in Township One Hundred Fifty-three (153) North, of Range Forty-four (44) West; the South Half of the Northwest Quarter (S½NW¼); and, The South Half of the Northeast Quarter (S½NE(¼), and Lots One (1), Two (2), Three (3) and Four (4) of Section Five (5), in Township One Hundred Fifty-two (152) North, of Range Forty-four (44) West of the Fifth Principal Meridian; that by virtue of the Power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, said mortgage will be foreclosed by the sale of said premises, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, by the Sheriff of Pennington County, Minnesota, at the East Front door of the Pennington County Court House, in the City of Thief River Falls, in said County and State, on the 15th day of May A. D. 1922, at 10 o'clock A. M., to satisfy the amount then due on said mortgage including said insurance and interest on prior mortgages, together with the costs of such sale, and Seventy-five ($75.00) Dollars, Attorney's fees stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the date of sale as provided by law.

Proceedings

of School District No. 102, St. Hilaire, Pennington County, Minnesota,

Pursuant to notice duly given, a meeting of the Board of Education of Independent School District Number 102 Pennington County Minnesota, was held on the 3rd day of April 1922 at 8:00 o'clock P. M., at Merchants State Bank in said district.

Members present, Wilson, Gigstad, Hooper, Nelson, Biskey, Burkee.

Members absent: None.

K. O. Gigstad offered the following resolution and moved its adoption:—

Whereas the qualified electors of Independent School District Number 102 of Pennington County, Minnesota, at an election called for the purpose on the 1st day of June 1921, have heretofore declared by their votes in favor of issuing the district's bonds for the purpose of funding its outstanding floating indebtedness, pursuant to a resolution of the board of education of said school district passed on the 16th day of May 1922, and

Whereas it is in the opinion of this board necessary and proper that such bonds be issued in the amount and on the terms and conditions hereinafter stated,

Now, Therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED that said school district issue its negotiable coupon bonds in the aggregate amount of $20,000 for said purpose, pursuant to the laws of the State of Minnesota That said bonds shall be 20 in number, numbered from 1 to 20 inclusive, being of the denomination of $1000 each, bearing date the 15th day of March 1922, bearing interest at the rate of seven per cent per annum, payable semi-annually on the 15th days of September and March in each year, and shall be due and payable as to principal and interest in Gold Coin of the United States of America of the present standard of weight and fineness at the First National Bank in the City of Minneapolis Minnesota.

That said bonds shall be due and payable as to principal on the 15th dy of March 1937.

That each of said bonds shall be in substantially the following form with the necessary variations as to numbers, which said form is hereby approved and adopted:—

No. $1000

United States of America,
State of Minnesota,
County of Pennington,
Independent School District Number
102,
FUNDING BOND.

KNOW ALL MEN BY THESE PRESENTS That Independent School District Number 102 Pennington County Minnesota, acknowledges itself to owe, and, for value received, promises to pay to bearer the sum of

One Thousand Dollars

($1000), in Gold Coin of the United States of the present standard of weight and fineness on the 15th day of March, 1937, with interest on said sum from the date hereof until paid at the rate of seven per cent per annum, payable semi-annually on the 15th days of September and March in each year upon presentation and surrender of the annexed interest coupons as they severally become due, both principal and interest being payable at the First National Bank in the City of Minneapolis, Minnesota.

This Bond is issued by said school district for the purpose of funding its outstanding floating indebtedness, in accordance and full compliance with the provisions of the laws of the State of Minnesota thereunto enabling.

It is hereby CERTIFIED and RECITED that all acts, conditions and things required by the laws and Constitution of the State of Minnesota, to be done precedent to and in the issuance of this bond, have happened and been duly performed, as required by law, and that the total indebtedness of said school district, including this bond, does not, nor did the indebtedness funded hereby at the time the same was incurred, exceed [illegible]

For the prompt payment of the principal and interest of this bond, according to its terms, the full faith, credit, and resources of said school district are hereby irrevocably pledged.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF the Board of Education of Independent School District Number 102 Pennington County, Minnesota, has caused this bond to be signed by its chairman and treasurer and countersigned by its clerk, as of this Fifteenth day of March 1922.

A. S. WILSON
Chairman
K. O. GIGSTAD
Treasurer

Countersigned:
E. O. BURKEE
Clerk.

and that there be coupons attached to each of said bonds which shall be in substantially the following form:—

$35 00 No.—

On the 15th day of September
March 19—

Independent School District Number 102 Pennington County, Minnesota, will pay to bearer Thirty-five Dollars ($35) in Gold Coin at First National Bank Minneapolis Minnesota, bearing the semi-annual installment of interest on its Funding Bond, dated March 15 1922, No.—

A. S. WILSON
Chairman

E. O. BURKEE
Clerk

RESOLVED, that on the school district's behalf, the chairman and treasurer of said board be and they are hereby authorized and directed to sign said bonds in substantially said form, and the clerk to countersign the same, and that the printed, lithographed or engraved fac simile of the chairman and clerk's signatures be attached to the coupons of said bonds, and that said bonds, when so prepared and executed, shall be placed in the custody of the treasurer for delivery to the purchaser thereof,

and

WHEREAS said bonds have been duly advertised for sale and awarded to Gates White & Co, of St. Paul, Minnesota, on their bid therefor, which said bid was not less than par, and has been and hereby is accepted. Be it further

RESOLVED that on said execution of said bonds the same shall be by the treasurer delivered to said Gates White & Co., on their paying into the treasury of said school district the amount of their bid therefor.

and

WHEREAS this board has duly investigated the necessary facts for the purpose of fully advising itself as to the validity of the district's warrants hereinafter described, and the legality of their indebtedness represented by said warrants respectively, purporting thereby to be owing by said school district to the different holders thereof, in order to fund the same or such part thereof as legally may be, into bonds of said school district, and

WHEREAS this board FINDS and DETERMINES that each and every one of the warrants in this resolution described was heretofore legally issued and that each of them now represents the legal, outstanding and enforceable obligation of said school district, and that each of said warrants and the different items of indebtedness evidenced thereby are proper to be funded into bonds, and the total of all of which warrants with the legal interest accrued thereon up to the 16th day of May 1921, aggregates in excess of the sum of $20,00.

Be it further

RESOLVED that the proceeds of said school district's refunding bonds to be issued as aforesaid, be applied as far as they will avail for that purpose, to pay the district's outstanding floating indebtedness which existed on the 16th day of May 1921, said indebtedness being evidenced by said school district's warrants herein specified, and that as each warrants is paid, the same be duly cancelled.

RESOLVED further that the full faith, credit and resources of said school district and of this Board of Education as such be, and the same hereby are irrevocably pledged for the prompt payment of the principal and interest of said bonds at maturity.

The number and amount of each of said warrants so to be funded are as specified in Schedule "A" hereto attached.

N. A. Nelson seconded the motion to adopt said resolution and the roll being called the same was adopted by the following vote:

Ayes: Wilson, Gigstad, Nelson, Hooper, Biskey, Burkee.

Nays: None.

Three Things Paint Must Do

First—It must cover the surface, be true to shade and not fade.

Second—Resist changes of temperature without cracking.

Third—Stand the sun without blistering, chalking or peeling; Endure, last and satisfy.

All these qualities plus economy will be secured if you wisely give your preference to

Bradley & Vrooman
Base and Tinter Paint

It is "live" fresh paint that spreads most easily and covers the most surface, gallon for gallon.

It possesses every good quality that stale "dead" paint lacks. Every drop is usable. There is no waste from hardening or settling in the package.

The colors are bright and glowing and it has the stamina and properties that give the greatest paint protection at a minimum cost.

Paint Doesn't Cost Money —It Saves It!

Unless your home is protected inside and outside by repainting at least once every four years, you will lose in repairs and lessened value, from five to ten times what the paint and labor would cost.

"Save the surface and you save all" Paint & Varnish

57 Shades of B. & V. Base and Tinter Paint in stock for inside and outside use. A Gold Bond Guarantee of satisfaction protects your purchase on every pint.

SALES AGENCY MAKES SAVING

Over $30,000 Saved In 90 Days By Co-operative Livestock Agency

South St. Paul:—Another record-breaking financial statement was issued recently by the Central Co-operative Commission association. Since first of the year; it has accumulated profits of more than $80,000 for its farmer patrons.

The associaiton was established at So. St. Paul markets eight months ago. At close of its first five months of business, it declared a divident of 25 percent and a stock divident of 8 per cent. It paid back to farmers nearly $20,000. That sum exceeded by $2,349 the entire amount paid in by farmers for the capital stock of the selling agency. The announcement made recently shows even greater savings for the first three months of 1922. These profits, accumulated to be returned to patrons of the association in dividends, amounts to about 60 per cent of all money received by the association in commissions.

It is estimated that the agency saved approximately $8.90 on every car of stock it handled in January and February. The association now has 375 local co-operative shippng associations in Minnesota, South Dakota and North Dakota.

Clean-up Time.

With coming of spring the season for cleaning up is at hand. all unsightly piles of rubbish and manure accumulated during the winter months should be hauled out. and every individual property owner should see that his premises are in good shape. If all will cooperate it will add materially to the appearance of the village, and will also work wonders from a sanitary point of view

File For Register

Register of Deeds N. J. Anderson has filed as a candidate for re-election to the office he now holds. This week Elmer Ohm, a young railroad man at Thief River, filed as a candidate for the same office.

A letter from Iowa states they are having about the same kind of weather down there as we are having here at present.

Paper Mill Proposed

A suggestion as to a possible market for wood products in establishment of a paper mill in Bemidji was made at the wood rate hearing conducted at the court house Tuesday evening when Harry Funston, land commisioner for the Soo Line, told of the value of Jack Pine as a timber for paper. Mr. Funston told of the success of paper mills in Wisconsin where this wood is used and also said that a mill of that character is now bieng built at Cloquet.—Bemidji Sentinel.

Form Spraying Rings

Southern Minnesota potato growers have bit upon a new idea in forming spraying "rings" whereby small growers combine and co-operate in spraying their potato crop. They buy one machine and hire a man to do the work, the cost of the machine, labor and mateiral being paid for pro rata by those in the ring. In this manner, no grower need go the expense of buying an entire outfit of machinery himself when starting in. No doubt the co-operation could be extended to include planting and digging as well as spraying.

In Good Condition

A study of the financial statements published by both local banks last week shows they are in considerable better shape than many others in different parts of the northwest. While neither of the banks are taking on any speculative business nor doing any extensive loaning owing to conditions throughout the country in general, the statements show that local people have about as much money deposited as in former years. While there are hard times and tight money in many parts of the country, southern Pennington County seems to be faring well in comparison.

Two Out For Co. Supt.

NEW HARDWARE FIRM STARTED

New People Buy Out The Nelson Hardware And Will Enlarge It

In a deal completed this week the Nelson Mercantile disposed of their hardware department which has been operated in connection with the general store on that corner for 25 years or more. The new firm which will be known as the Bergh, Thorvick Hardware Company is composed of P. E. Bergh and A. J. Thorvick. The former hails from Brandon, and the later from Thief River Falls. Both men have had considerable experience in the hardware and furniture lines, and they intend to put in a complete stock of both. They have finished invoicing the Nelson stock and are now open for business at the same location. Heavy shipments of goods have been ordered and they expect to have a good sized stock in place within the next two or three weeks.

Being as this vilage has been without a complete hardware or furniture store for many years, the new firm will fill a long-felt want. Mr. Thorvick, who is a married man, will move here soon and will have charge of the store. The Spectator joins with others in bidding the new firm welcome, and wishing them success in their new undertaking.

Electric Bell for Poultry House.

Many people have been bothered with night prowlers around and about the buildings. The following plan may be used in installing electric bells, which will immediately sound an alarm. A strip of copper is bent around the doorknob shank, and is clamped with a small screw, which is also used as a terminal. Fasten a metal strip to the door and bend it out between the prongs of the strip on the knob. Attach a wire to this strip and run to the electric bell. Now when the knob is turned in either direction the circuit is closed and the bell will ring.—Experimenter.

Crabs That Crush Concrete.

An extraordinary discovery was made recently by men working on a bridge in Flordia. For many years it has been the custom for engineers to protect wooden piles and piers under water by encasing them in concrete, which saves them from the ravages of destructive sea worms. Now it has been discovered that the small stone-crab can dig through the hardest concrete and break it up completely. The result is a new and very serious problem for engineers in places where this crab abounds, for concrete casing has been regarded hitherto as a cheap and excellent form of protection.

Mr. Hatcher: I'll take Eskimo pie al a mode and coffee.

Professor (in Geometry class): "And can any of you gentlemen tell me where has my polygon?"

Wisecracker (in the rear): "Up the Geometree, sir."

The Senior class play, "The Elopement of Ellen" will be given in the near future. This play has met with unusual success wherever it has been put on, and the Senior class, in keeping with their reputation, plan to "put it across" with flying colors. Watch for announcements.

Boy to his dad: "Dad, can you sign your name with your eyes shut?"

His dad: Certainly."

Boy: "Well, then, shut your eyes and sign my report card."

Plans are now being made to organize a baseball team, and judging from the material we have in high school, we should have a team this year better than any before. Almost every neighboring school have organized teams, and it should not be a difficult matter to arrange a few games before school closes.

SKELETON 250 YEARS OLD

Scientist Studies Remains Found in Hawaii to Find Origin of Race.

Honolulu.—Half of a human skeleton believed to be two hundred and fifty years old, discovered on this island by a bather, is being examined by Dr. Edward Handy of the staff of the Bishop museum, in the hope that it may help solve the problem of the origin of the Polynesian race. The skeleton includes the major portion of a man's torso, and is in an excellent state of preservation, especially the teeth. These are of unusual size and strength and give rise to the belief that the skeleton may be older than 250 years. Doctor Handy said. The spinal column also is preserved partially.

Caught Big Snapping Turtle.

Poplar Bluff, Mo.—Probably the largest snapping turtle ever taken from Black river was captured one Sunday recently by Ed Anse. It was 5 feet 3 inches from tip of nose to the end of its tail, weighed 84 pounds and bore a shell that measured 19 by 25 inches. His mouth, opened wide, measured 11 inches. Its severed head weighed 12 pounds and measured 8 inches across.

SICK WOMEN THIEF'S TARGET

Victims Just From Hospital Are Gulled by Wily Trick of Paris Crook.

Paris.—The limit in fraudulent audacity is displayed by a man of fifty-three for whom the Paris police are looking. He has been in the habit of calling at the homes of women who have just come out of the hospital, presenting himself as a Poor Law doctor sent to examine them and report on their progress.

Having caused a woman to undress, he gravely covers her head with her clothes, instructs her to count 40 slowly and then hold her breath. When the woman's attention is thus distracted the man snatches up anything of value and steals away.

Works Well.

What Causes Air Pockets?

Air pockets have long been a menace to aviators. Those who are familiar with water eddies and whirlpools, can readily visualize air pockets, since they are formed in much the same way. Air pockets are caused by local refraction of the atmosphere. Cyclones are really air pockets on an enormous scale. Small air pockets vary in diameter from a few feet to several hundred feet. Airplanes driving into an air pocket are sucked downward and the aviators lose all control. Unlike the cyclone, small air pockets are absolutely invisible.—Popular Science Monthly.

Distinguished Visitor.

It was the bishop bold of a colonial see, and in the course of his episcopal visitation he arrived at an upcountry farm, many miles from anywhere, the proprietor of which was very proud of his knowledge of the world and had instructed his wife to be sure and call the visitor "Lord" whenever she addressed him. The good wife was more generous-minded than her husband, and when dinner began she broke silence with the remark, "Well, Bill, I don't think much of you as a helper. Give the lord some more gravy."

Sympathetic.

Tommy came to his mother the other day, crying and complaining that his big sister had been teasing him. "Mamma," he said between sobs, "I wish you would spank Elizabeth." "Now, Tommy," his mother replied, "you wouldn't want to see your sister whipped, would you?" "No, ma'am! But you can take her upstairs and do it where I can't see you."

Literally Marries Family.

An account of life in a remote part of Tibet, where women propose to men, and marry a whole family of brothers at the same time, is given by F. W. Thomas, chief librarian at the India office and reader in Tibetan in London university. The women are robust and unveiled and wear skirts and bodices, and tie their somewhat plentiful hair in a framework above their heads. They marry a whole family of brothers at the same time. If there are ten brothers in the family she desires to marry into the woman marries them all. The courting is done in the ordinary go-between system of the East, but the Tibetan woman has a great deal to say in her choice of the family into which she [illegible]

FARMERS WOULD MARKET EGGS

Statewide Creameries Ass'n. Calls Conference To Discuss Project.

The thousands of Minnesota women who raise chickens will be interested in a cooperative marketing conference taking place in St. Paul on April 28-29. This conference will make plans for co-operative marketing of eggs thru the Co-operative Creameries Ass'n.

Large consignments of eggs already are being marketed thru the state association; they being included in carload lots of butter, and shipped to eastern markets at a considerable saving.

The plan under discussion which calls for marketing eggs thru practically every creamery in the state, will have the backing and co-operation of the Minnesota Farm Bureau federation as well as the county Farm Bureaus.

Creamery Helps Farmer

Co-operative creameries paid an average price during 1921 of from 7 to 10 cents more than was paid by cream stations, according to A. J. McGuire, dairy extension specialist of University Farm.

"It is estimated that farmers of Minnesota received $20 a year more per cow for the last five years because they have 600 co-operative creameries in the state than they would have received had there been no such creameries" says Mr. McGuire.

"As a matter of fact, the poorest co operative creameries pay as well as the best cream stations. Three conditions are necessary to make a co-operative creamery of the first class, namely, a sufficient amount of business good business management, and good cream."

After spending a few days here with relatives Tim Eosrud left Tuesday for Minneapolis where he expects to take another course of treatment at the government hospital.

Gunstad—Johnson

Last Saturday evening at the Trinity Lutheran parsonage at Thief River Falls occured the marriage of Miss Clara Gunstad, daughter of Mrs. A. Gunstad, to Mr. Anton W. Johnson of Rocksbury.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. T. Sweger in the presence of Miss Rose Gunstad, sister of the bride, and Arne Johnson, brother of the groom. The young couple will make their home on the groom's farm northeast of this village. Numerous friends in this vicinity join in extending congratulations.

Seeding Under Way

Seeding of small grain begun last week in some places in this locality, and with warmer weather coming on first of this week, seeding became general throughout the territory. Very little wheat will be put in this spring, but there is a large acreage of winter rye in that is coming along in fine shape. There will be more corn and potatoes put in this year than ever before.

Will Build Station

Erection of a bulk oil station here by the Standard Oil Company which matter has been discussed every year for a number of years past, bids fair to become a reality this spring. Information received by local representatives says that all arrangements have been made, and the station will be built. A pumping outfit for handling the oil from cars to station tanks, arrived yesterday.

Alfred J. Anderson Dies

Alfred John, son of John Anderson who resides south of this place, died late Friday evening at the Sunnyrest sanitorium at Crookston where he has been a patient since last June.

He was born at Joliet, Ill., in 1888 and was 33 years and ten months of age at the time of his death. He came to this section with his parents about six years ago. He served with the U. S Army in France during the war, and it was while in service he contracted the disease which broke down his health and finally resulted in his death. John was of a quiet, retiring nature and was held in high esteem by all who knew him, and his death at this time is deeply regretted by his many friends in this vicinity.

Besides his aged father he leaves five brothers and one sister to mourn his death. The brothers are: Gustave, at Thief River Falls; Carl, at Rockford, Ill.; Iver, at Chicago, Ill.; Ernest, at Joliet, Ill; and Philip who resides at home. His sister is Mrs. Thos. Tinsman of Grand Forks. The remains were shipped here Monday morning, and after short services at the Swedish Tarna cemetery, were interred beside those of his mother who died in January, 1921.

Truck Line Starts

A motor tuck line between Thief River Falls and Crookston has started operation. The line passes thru here, and is prepared to handle any and all kinds of freight to and from the towns named above as well as intermediate points. Two Minutes Spell— Paint Certainty

THE two minutes it takes to squeeze the Tinter (tube of coloring) in the can of Liquid Base (body paint) spells certainty of successful results when you use B. & V. Base and Tinter Paint.

Preparing this paint for the job is just as easy and simple as putting sugar into coffee—and you know you are really using fresh paint.

Every housewife prefers fresh eggs to stale eggs, fresh vegetables to stale vegetables, for the excellent reason that the fresh has more goodness than the stale. Anything in common use is better when fresh than when stale because staleness in reality is nothing but deterioration.

Bradley & Vrooman
Base and Tinter Paint

Is freshly made, freshly mixed and freshly colored when it goes on the job. It costs no more than stale paint, therefore why take chances with inferior materials, particularly when your own common sense and experience tells you FRESH paint is better paint?

Paint Doesn't Cost Money —It Saves It!

Unless your home is protected inside and outside by repainting at least once every four years, you will lose in repairs and lessened value, from five to ten times what the paint and labor would cost.

"Save the surface and you save all" Paint & Varnish

57 Shades of Base and Tinter Paint in stock. The Gold Bond Guarantee positively protects you against any, every and all troubles traceable to the paint. It does more—it warrants that you will secure unusually satisfactory results.

Political Announcement

(This notice to be paid for by N. J. Anderson at regular space rates.)

To the voters of Pennington county:

I am a candidate for re-election for Register of Deeds of Pennington county. During the years I have served the people of the county as Register of Deeds I have made many friends, but I am not asking support in the present campaign merely by virtue of this friendship. Rather I would have the voters consider my candidacy on a purely efficiency basis as the only proper method of electing officials to public office. In regards to fitness for the office of Register of Deeds, both as to honesty and capability, I prefer to rest my case with the people of Pennington county whom I served in past years.

Yours respectfully,
N. J. ANDERSON

PROTECTION TO STOCK SHIPPERS

Brokers Required To Deposit Net Sales Receipts In Trust Banks.

Livestock Commission merchants operating in Minnesota are required by an order of the Minnesota Railroad and Warehouse Commission, issued April 27, to make a separate bank deposit of all net receipts from sales of stock consigned to them, such deposites or trust funds to be distinct from the regular business accounts. Commissioner Ivan Bowen, who drafted the new rule, explains that its purpose is to protect livestock shippers from losses through the failure or financial embarrassment of their brokers. Such trust funds will be safe from any action from creditors of the brokers and will constitute a guaranty that the shippers will obtain all that should be coming to them. No money may be withdrawn from such funds other than to pay the claims of the consignors for whom stock has been sold. The order should prove distinctly beneficial to the livestock industry in view of the fact that serious losses have been sustained in the past through the failure of commission houses, but will be prevented in the future, if the brokers comply with the rule of the Commission.

Here From St. Paul

Herman Adams, a former St. Hilaire resident and who now resides in St. Paul, came last week to renew acquaintances, greet old friends, and look after matters in connection with the C. H. Peterson estate in which Mrs. Adams is one of the heirs. Mr. Adams noted there was considerable change in St. Hilaire since he left fourteen years ago.

After finishing his business here, he left for home yesterday.

For Commissioner

Joe V. Patton filed Tuesday for commissioner from the third commissioner district which is represented at present by Gust Naplin. Joe is a good roads enthusiast as well as a general all around booster and good fellow, and he has a large following of friends in his district who are backing him to the limit. There promises to be a battle royal in that district at the fall election.

Class Play Friday

The Senior class of the local high school will present their class play "The Elopement of Ellen", a farce comedy in three acts, at the Imperial Hall next Friday evening, May 5th. A children's matinee will be given at 3:30 Friday afternoon, and the evening performance at 8:00. The play is advertised as a "gloom chaser" and those who have inside information say it is all that and more. The play is reported to be the most elaborate ever attempted by any graduating class in the local school, so no one should miss it.

George Heath Is Dead

Estate Case Settled

The court case connected with the settlement of the C. H. Peterson estate which case was to be heard before Judge Grindeland at special term of district court at Thief River Falls, yesterday, was settled outside of court. Mr. Peterson, who was a pioneer resident of Sanders township, was fatally injured in an accident last fall. Shortly before he died he made a Will, leaving practically all his personal property to his housekeeper. It was to test the validity of this Will that the suit was started. The real property part of the estate went to the children by terms of the Will so there was no question in dispute on that portion of the estate.

Community Club Meet

An excellent meeting of the St. Hilaire Community Club was held at the school building last Friday night. The program was very good and was thoroughly enjoyed by those who attended. The question of arranging for a tourist park as well as other questions of importance were taken up and discussed. Chairman Ralph Stephenson suggested a plan for a camping park on the railroad property that is a mighty good proposition, and one that should be investigated further. Lunch was served, as usual, after the program.

MORE POTATOES THIS YEAR

Acreage Will Be Increased About 30 Per-cent In This Vicinity.

A large potato acreage will again be planted in the vicinity of St. Hilaire this year. Mr. Alfred Benson, President of the Pennington County Produce Association states that the acreage would be increased 30 per cent in this vicinity. Growers raised very fine stock during the season of 1921 and recieved very good returns for them. Those who recieved over $500 for the potatoes shipped through the Pennington County Produce Association are as follows:

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That default has been made in the conditions of a mortgage executed by Edward Johnson and M. E. Johnson, his wife, mortgagors, to Milo G. Drake and Elsie F. Drake, Mortgagees, dated July 19th, 1918, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Pennington County, Minnesota on the 12th day of December, 1918, at 8 o'clock A. M., in Book 58 of mortgages on page 543 thereof.

That such default consists in the non-payment, when due, of the interest which fell due upon said mortgage on July 19th, 1921, and the non-payment of taxes upon the land covered by said mortgage, and the non-payment of premiums on the insurance policies covering the improvements of said Real Estate, and the non-payment of the interest on prior mortgages according to the terms of said mortgage, and the Mortgagees having been obliged to pay and having paid the sum of Five Hundred Five and 78-100 ($505.78) Dollars as interest on prior mortgages, preimums on insurance policies and cost of foreclosure of prior mortgages.

And, whereas, the said Mortgagees have duly elected to declare and do hereby declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms and conditions of said mortgage and the power of sale therein contained, and, whereas, there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable, at the date of this notice the sum of Forty-three hundred Seventy-six and 42-100 ($4,376.42) Dollars including the insurance and interest on prior mortgages paid aforesaid; that the premises described in and covered by said mortgage are situated in Pennington County, Minnesota, and described as follows: The South East Quarter of the Southeast Quarter (SE¼SE¼) of Section Thirty-three (33); and, the South Half of the Southwest Quarter (S½SW¼); and, the Northeast Quarter of the Southwest Quarter (NE¼SW¼) of Section Thirty-four (34); all in Township One Hundred Fifty-three (153) North, of Range Forty-four (44) West; the South Half of the Northwest Quarter (S½NW¼); and, The South Half of the Northeast Quarter (S½NE¼), and Lots One (1), Two (2), Three (3) and Four (4) of Section Five (5), in Township One Hundred Fifty-two (152) North, of Range Forty-four (44) West of the Fifth Principal Meridian; that by virtue of the Power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, said mortgage will be foreclosed by the sale of said premises, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, by the Sheriff of Pennington County, Minnesota, at the East Front door of the Pennington County Court House, in the City of Thief River Falls, in said County and State, on the 15th day of May A. D. 1922, at 10 o'clock A. M., to satisfy the amount then due on said mortgage including said insurance and interest on prior mortgages, together with the costs of such sale, and Seventy-five ($75.00) Dollars, Attorney's fees stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and disbursements allowed by law subject to redemption at any time within one year from the date of sale as provided by law.

Origin of Moon-Eyed.

The expression "moon-eyed," as popularly used to describe an advanced stage of intoxication, had its origin in India, where a certain variety of drink taken in excess renders its victims blind from sunset to sunrise, or during the period that the moon is shining. The condition in extreme cases lasts as long as eighteen or nineteen days.

BABY PLAYHOUSE COSTS MILLION

Mr. and Mrs. Dan Hamilton, Memphis, Erect Structure for Their Two Youngsters.

EMPLOYS ARTISTS FOR JOB

Beautiful Panels Illustrate Characters From the More Popular of the Fairy Tales—Miniature Stage Is One of the Features.

New York.—A beautiful, artistic building created by New York artists who flock to Cape May in the summer season, is the $1,000,000 playhouse erected on the country estate at Centreville of Mr. and Mrs. Dan Hamilton of Memphis, Tenn., for their children, Dan, Jr., and Margaret. It is truly a playhouse, fiber, timber and beam. Mrs. Hamilton, sensing that artists were the people to create a house radiating beauty and the make-believe, commissioned Thomas Hunt and his wife, Dorothy, to build and decorate the playhouse.

The little house, with its golden-white stucco walls and steep-pitched red-tiled roof, stands in a cluster of pines above the marshes and overlooking the sand dunes of the cape and the blue waters of Vineyard sound.

Beamed With Oak.

One enters a spacious, low-ceilinged playroom, heavily beamed with oak and stained in gold and cerulean blue, the rough plaster walls radiating the same golden hue. Here is a big fireplace, faced with orange tiles of special designs done in daring lines and hues and giving a touch of the old-world peasant fireplace. Above the fireplace is a low-hung balcony, which invites untold adventure, since it can be reached only by a ship's ladder.

Over the fireplace and along the balcony are three panels executed by Mrs. Hunt, illustrating characters of fairy tales—"Red Ridinghood," "Prince Charming," "The Enchanted Princess" and "Hansel and Gretel." Big windows let in masses of light, and tiny windows form enticing peepholes from which imprisoned princesses can gaze far down the winding river and search the woods for the approach of the prince.

Fully Equipped Stage.

At the far end of the playroom is a little stage fitted with footlights and a spotlight and curtained with a blue and silver tapestry whereon is depicted the love of Pierrot and Columbine in an abandoned park.

But perhaps nothing pleases "Dan Ham" and his playfellows so much as his treasure chest. It is of oak, modeled after a famous old Spanish sea chest, with hammered brass corners, straps and lock plate, and with rings around the base to lash it to the deck in rough weather. On it Mr. Hunt has wrought in gorgeous and daring color pictorial scenes of pirates burying their treasure, and Spanish galleons. A close inspection of the characters brings squeals of joy from the children, for as has been said, the Hamilton group has been used as motif in many of the designs. Captain Kidd bears a remarkable resemblance to Daddy Hamilton.

The Hi-Light

Doings at St. Hilaire High

By the Sophomores

The senior class will present their play, "The Elopement of Ellen," May 5th. We predict great success as the reward of hard work and good coaching by the high school faculty.

We all looking are forward to the Interscholastic tournament to be held at Greenbush this spring. In the baseball and tennis tournaments and the vaulting, jumping, running and other contests, St. Hilaire will take an active part. We hope to carry home as many honors and more too than last year.

Last week the Seniors gave their program during assembly hour. It consisted of a "community sing" an interesting talk by Rev. A. F. Nelson on his sightseeing in London and Edinburgh and a short talk by professor Hatcher on the field meet in Greenbush this year. All enjoyed the numbers.

Arthur Johnson was suffering from a bad cold last week. He got a tooth knocked out in front and his system could not stand the draft.

Blanch R. (to Victor) Are you a Freshmen? Victor —No, I am a Swede.

Miss Owen—"All those who were asleep in General Science class today will be graded D" Paul —"Was I asleep, Miss Owen?" Miss Owen—"No, but you might as well have been."

It has been said of Vivian Novak, that she is so modest that she refuses to work improper fractions.

Mr. Hatcher —"What table must we go to in studing the metric system in order to change from capasity to weight?" Vivinne —"The dinner table."

Wesloh: (In Geometry class) "Give an example of, The whole is greater than any of its parts." Art Nerdahl: "A restaurant doughnut."

Somthing We Should Like To Know
Where Harvey gets his styles?
What the attraction in Ethel is?
Where Hatcher gets the red ink when making out the report cards?
Why Victor is like a live wire?
What the attraction at the old dam is?
Why some people make other peoples business theirs?

WANTED
A complete course of anti-fat—Margret
A girl—Harvey
A grin reducer—Gunhild
A new hair dress—Victor

Miss Ruth Conway spent the week-end with friends at Thief River Falls.

Miss Anna Alhberg visited at the Oscar Petersen home Saturday.

Art Roese of Plummer spent last Sunday at the home of his brother, Clarence.

Seeding is on in full blast and with favorable weather conditions, will be finished in another ten days.

Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Johson are rejoicing over the arrival of a son which came to gladden their home last week.

We'll see you at the Imperial ball at St. Hilaire, Friday evening, May 5th.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Breneman accompanied by Mrs. Carl Nelson and children and Mrs. Shervs autoed over from St. Hilaire Friday to attend the party at the Alhberg home.

About thirty friends tendered a surprise party in the form of a parcel shower on Mrs. Carl Alhberg last Friday afternoon. The afternoon was spent in conversation and needlework after which a dainty lunch was served brought by the self invited guests.

Political Announcement

(This notice to be paid for by N. J. Anderson at regular space rates.)

To the voters of Pennington county:

I am a candidate for re-election for Register of Deeds of Pennington county. During the years I have served the people of the county as Register of Deeds I have made many friends, but I am not asking support in the present campaign merely by virtue of this friendship. Rather. I would have the voters consider my candidacy on a purely efficiency basis as the only proper method of electing officials to public office. In regards to fitness for the office of Register of Deeds, both as to honesty and capability, I prefer to rest my case with the people of Pennington county, whom I served in past years.

Yours respectfully,
N. J. ANDERSON

Packing Flowers to Ship.

When packing flowers for mail, fill box, but be careful to avoid the slightest pressure on the blooms. Sprinkle flowers well with water and use only tissue paper to line the box. A good way to pack long-stemmed flowers is to lay them in rows at each end of the box, their stems overlapping in the center. Take a stick just a trifle longer than the inside width of the box and spring it across the center of the box pressing it well down on to the ends of the stems. This plan keeps every bloom from moving and becoming bruised or broken. Roll tissue paper around the stick. This prevents any damage being done to the stalks. Never use cotton wool except when packing very delicate hothouse specimens.

Tampico Terrors.

Tampico, Mexico's great oil port, is on the Pounco river, nine miles from the Gulf of Mexico, and visitors find a choice assortment of vigorous and enterprising mosquitoes; but worse still are the myriads of flies, which exhibit uncanny intelligence. Netted doors on the oil tanks attract them in thousands, and immediately a portal is open they fly in, to scent the whereabouts of delicacies with the initiative of a prohibition officer. During rain the air is unusually damp and malarious, and in dry weather something approaching a sandstorm of the Great Sahara can be enjoyed. Americans working in the oil fields at Tampico earn liberal wages, which most of them feel they thoroughly deserve.

Words' Meaning Changed.

At present scan is used to mean to glance over, but its original meaning was to examine closely. This survives in our term to scan verse. The derivation is from Latin scandere, to climb. The "d" was mistaken for the past participle "ed," hence our modern word. Among other words springing from the same source, and so related to "scan," are slander and scandal. The latter was originally the spring of a trap or the stick upon which the bait was placed. Slander which was variously spelled sclandre or sclaundre, is only another form of scandal.

Pink Milk.

If your are in doubt about the cream on your milk, add a tiny drop of spirits of salts. If the milk has been adulterated to give it a rich appearance, it will turn pink—and then you can turn the milkman pink by showing him how the trick is done! You can, by the way, also test your vinegar by the same method. If it is bogus vinegar a little spirits of salts will turn it a brilliant green.

SMALL CYCLONE HITS VILLAGE

Considerable Damage Done In And Near Town By Storm Yesterday.

St. Hilaire and vicinity was visited yesterday afternoon by a real little cyclone which did damage estimated today to reach several thousands of dollars. The storm had all the earmarks of a tornado, being of the twister type. It struck with full force about five o'clock, and for several minutes the air was filled with flying debris of various kinds.

The large feed barn belonging to A. Satterberg was so badly wrecked that it will have to be torn down. Henry Georgen lost his barn, the pieces of which was strewn over two blocks.

Other losses reported are: Albert Kolp, outbuildings; Hans Hanson, barn; Nash Bros., machine shed; Mrs. A. J. Larson, barn; Ed Engh, barn, house damaged; N. Benoit, garage, car damaged; John Folstad, barn; R. Hauge, barn; N. E. Beebe, barn and machine shed; Swedish church, barn, chimney; Felix Grandbois, garage; W. Hartje, barn.

Several store fronts were blown in, among which are: A. S. Wilson & Son. Larson Bros., Imperial, Spectator, and The Bergh-Thorvick Hdwe. Co. A box car standing near the coal sheds was unroofed, the roof being driven thru the side of the lumber shed adjoining. A large number of shade trees were torn up and broken in different places about town. Chimneys and awnings sustained severe damages in many places. The old Synod church building was moved on its foundation and a number of other places were more or less twisted.

The power transmission line of the Red River Power Company was put out of commission so there is neither lights or power in town today. Telephone lines are down so that no communication can be had except with Thief River Falls.

Considerable damage was done by water at a number of residences where window lights were blown in.

Reports from outlaying districts is that little damage was done there, but Wylie is reported to have suffered some damage.

School Play Was Fine

The three act play, "The Elopement Ellen" was presented by the senior class of the local high school to a crowded house at the Imperial last Friday evening. The play was full of laughable incidents which kept the house in good humor from beginning to end of the play. A good deal of credit is due members of the cast who played their parts with precision that would have reflected credit on professional actors.

For Register Of Deeds

Fred Lorentson, well known Black River farmer, shied his lid into the political ring Tuesday by filing as a candidate, at the primary election, for the office of Register of Deeds of Pennington County. With four candidates ig the field for that office, the battle promises to be a hot one. Fred does not intend to let the nomination slip for want of effort to secure it.

Bergh–Prestebak

At the Zion Lutheran parsonage of Thief River Falls the marriage of Peder E. Bergh of St. Hilaire, to Miss Carrie Prestebak of this city took place Saturday, May 6. Rev. George Larson officiated in the presence of Richard Prestebak, brother of the bride, and Miss Della Urdahl. The groom has for several years been employed at Sandberg's elevator. Mr. and Mrs. Bergh will make their home at St. Hilaire, where Mr. Bergh is manager of the Bergh and Thorwick hardware store.—Thief River Falls Tribune.

Lose-At Fertile

The local ball team motored Sunday to Fertile and took on the fast aggregation at that place for the first game this season. After holding Fertile to no score for five innings, a couple costly errors by St. Hilaire lost the game for them by a score of 6 to 5. The boys are well pleased with the outcome, however, considering this was their first game this year, and none of the players had had much practice.

A new outfit of uniforms for the ball team arrived first of this week. They are grey with green trimmings, and make a very nifty appearance.

See "Mary's Millions" it's full of laffs. Will be shown at the Imperial St. Hilaire, Friday evening, May 12.

Lake Gives Up Dead

The bodies of John Steen and Garfield Franson who were drowned while on a duck hunting trip at Elm Point in the Lake of the Woods out from Warroad last fall, were recovered Wednesday last week. An Indian out canoeing found the body of Franson floating in the lake. Being unable to get it ashore owing to the floating ice he secured it to a stake and went into Warroad to summon assistance. A party with a motor boat went out and found the body at the place indicated. A search in the vicinity resulted in finding the body of Steen about 80 rods away at edge of a muskeg a few rods from where the men were last seen. As both men were members of the American Legion that organization had charge of the double funeral which took place at Warroad last Thursday afternoon.

Will Play Here

The Senior class of the Red Lake Falls high school will present their class play "Mary's Millions" at the Imperial hall here Friday evening this week. The play is a three act farce comedy and is reported to be full of "pep" from start to finish. The play will be presented under the direction of Miss Hulda Hanson, principal of the Red Lake Falls high school.

Political Announcement

(This notice to be paid for by N. J. Anderson at regular space rates.)

To the voters of Pennington county:

I am a candidate for re-election for Register of Deeds of Pennington county. During the years I have served the people of the county as Register of Deeds I have made many friends, but I am not asking support in the present campaign merely by virtue of this friendship. Rather I would have the voters consider my candidacy on a purely efficiency basis as the only proper method of electing officials to public office. In regards to fitness for the office of Register of Deeds, both as to honesty and capability, I prefer to rest my case with the people of Pennington county, whom I served in past years.

Yours respectfully,
N. J. ANDERSON

Beautiful Athens Gardens.

The gardens in Athens, which were laid out by an Englishman some years ago, are very beautiful. Many plants which in this country flourish in greenhouses are to be found in profusion there. Violets border all the beds and bloom throughout the winter.

Floor Bleach.

If an unfilled or undressed hardwood floor becomes grimy apply a solution of two ounces of oxalic acid dissolved in just enough water to wet it all over. Let stand 15 or 20 minutes; then rinse in cold water and wash without suds.

The Wonderful Tigris.

From Bagdad to the sea, more than 600 miles, the Tigris is navigable for any boat not drawing more than about eight feet. River steamers go to Bagdad, though they often run aground on the shifting sands.

India Nation of Farmers.

The large majority of the population of India are engaged in agricultural pursuits, nearly 200,000,000 being engaged in tilling the soil or dependent for their living upon those so engaged.

Miss Owen to Paul:—Name the different kinds of fish. Paul:—Dry land suckers.

Phun is the best physick i no ov, it iz both cheap and durable.

Nels—I have heard you talk in your sleep, Alice, that's something you do that I dont. Alice That's the only time I have a chance.

The seventh grade gave their program last Wednesday. It consisted of several musical numbers and readings and was greatly enjoyed by all. (Short but sweet)

Knute, inreport: His father died in his infancy.

Heard when passing the office: Mr. Wesloh:—Did you hear about the man who saved 18 lives out near Wylie? Mr. Hatcher:—No, how did he do it? Mr. Wesloh: He pulled two cats from a well.

A little fourth grader carring a gopher in a trap. Gee, look here. Sophomore—Oh what is it? A skunk?

Miss Owen (reciting a poem) Oh, what mirth to whistle (Clifford sees that her memory fails her) Clifford "Setting on a thistle."

Mr. Hatcher in Physics —"How many kinds of time are there?" Student,—"Three." Mr. Hatcher—"Name them." Student—"Eastern, central and Mr. Frickers."

Mr. Wesloh to Norman.—You had better use elbow grease.

Norman: Where is it, in the boiler room?

Tomins, Ethel and Knute wish it was dark during general science class.

Prof in Physiology—"Where is the funnay bone?" Student—"In the humeurs, I suppose."

How Queer It Would Be If—
Julia gave up arguing
Knute did not wear a sweater
George Norman should make a speech
Max should smile
Leo did not recieve any letters
Nels and Alice failled to take their evening stroll.
Blanche became excited.
Clifford should be out of humor.
Hervey came in time for school.

Mr. Wesloh—"Cant you answer this? I really gave the answer in my question. Vivienne—"Will you please repeat your question."

THE RETURN

By FRANCES E. GOODRICH

©, 1923, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

To the human derelict walking down the crowded avenue, it seemed there had never dawned a more nearly perfect new year. It was cold, but not the wind-driven, piercing cold, that cuts one's thin clothing like a knife. The sun was melting the last remnants of snow, and as he stopped in a sheltered doorway he felt almost warm.

After ten years James Oreland was in his native city. He had crept in during the dark hours, and had walked the streets to keep from freezing.

Two blocks away was the stately home he had known until ten years ago. He knew just how it would look that morning. Wreaths in the windows and doors; the fires blazing in the great fireplaces; the fragrance of the holiday greens and flowers. His own room would be warm and sunny. How he had loved that room, and yet he had given it all up—all the wealth and love and companionship, because of imagined slight.

He had been proud and stubborn, and because he thought his older brother had been given preference over himself, he had sworn he would go and never return until he could come back with assured position and wealth that would cheapen his brother's possessions. With bitterness in his heart he had turned a deaf ear to his mother's pleadings and his sister's tears. He had refused to see the hand his brother held out to him, or hear the urge in his brother's voice, as he begged him to reconsider, if only for their mother's sake.

He had gone, and after ten years came sneaking back like a criminal, without the money or position he had so arrogantly boasted would be his.

Two months before he had secured a copy of a newspaper in which his mother's name was mentioned in connection with some charitable event. It was this which had created the longing in him to come back and see her if possible from a distance, and to see the home he had left.

He had three dollars in his pocket. It was problematical when he would earn more, but he would have a good breakfast, anyway. He went to a cheaper section of the city, where he knew he would get satisfying food for little money.

After he had eaten, he wandered about the streets, fighting a constantly increasing restlessness and homesickness. To be so near his own home, his own family, and feel he could not go to them, seemed more than he could bear. Pride whispered to him all the vows he had made when he left home. No, he couldn't go back now. He cursed himself for a fool in coming back at all.

"Paper, sir?" barked a shrill voice in his ear. He started. It had been months since a newsboy had thought it worth while to ask him if he wanted a paper. A faint feeling of self-respect crept over him. He straightened up and felt in his pockets for the pennies.

He sat down in a sunny little park and opened the paper, wondering what he would find to interest him again in the news of his native city.

Suddenly his lips whitened. Blazing at him from the crowded sheet was a small item. It told him his mother was seriously ill.

In a blinding flash the folly of the last ten years came to him. The bitterness and hate swept away. He saw only his own error.

He must go to her, penniless and ragged as he was. His mother would welcome him in whatever garb he came.

It did not take him many minutes to reach his home. The door was opened by a new servant, who looked askance at him. But just then his sister came into the hall. For a doubtful instant she regarded him, then with a little cry of recognition and welcome, drew him in. There was no hint of reproach in her greeting, or wonderment at his shabby appearance, only a tenderness that cut him to the heart.

He held out the newspaper item.

"How is she?" he managed to whisper.

"A little better, this morning. In fact, she is not as ill as the papers stated, and I feel sure now she will recover quickly. I think I had better prepare her before she sees you, however. Wait here, or, no, perhaps you would rather go to your room first. It is just as you left it, and every morning mother has had a fire built there."

Chokingly, he went up the familiar stairs, down the long hall to his room. It was as his sister had said. The fire burned redly in the fireplace. His clothes were hung carefully in the closet. He took down a gray suit he had liked especially well. He bathed, then dressed in the gray suit. A knock came on the door and his sister was ready to take him to his mother.

At the door of his mother's room she kissed him and left him to go alone.

Straight to the big bed he went, his head bent low. He knelt blindly beside her. A warm soft hand touched his cheek; the dearest voice in the world called him "son," and he sobbed like a little child, while the tears washed away the hardness, leaving only the clean spirit of the New Year.

Gives Newspapers Credit

"The Spectator is extending good roads in its field—continuing an invaluable contribution to the Minnesota good roads movement begun before the Amendment No. 1 campaign in which it took part. And this is but one public service of many given by the newspapers of the state."

The statement was made by Chas. M. Babock state highway comissioner after he had received an official report that following announcement in this and other papers of a drive against auto tax slackers, receipts in the license department had suddenly doubled and were averaging $12,500 a day. Not only are the newspapers doing a service for the state, but they are saving their readers more penalties and costs. By way of keeping faith with the newspapers announcing the slacker campaign, the commissioner states that 141 inspectors have been assigned to work. All these have instructions that ample warning has been given and prosecutions must be in order now, as was given out in the press of the state.

Political Announcement

(This notice to be paid for by N. J. Anderson at regular space rates.)

To the voters of Pennington county:

I am a candidate for re-election for Register of Deeds of Pennington county. During the years I have served the people of the county as Register of Deeds I have made many friends, but I am not asking support in the present campaign merely by virtue of this friendship. Rather I would have the voters consider my candidacy on a purely efficiency basis as the only proper method of electing officials to public office. In regards to fitness for the office of Register of Deeds, both as to honesty and capability, I prefer to rest my case with the people of Pennington county, whom I served in past years.

Yours respectfully,
N. J. ANDERSON

ITALY SHOWS REGAINED ART

Exhibits Beautiful Treasures Recovered From Austria as Result of War.

Rome.—Italy will soon hold an exhibition to display to the world the beautiful art treasures she has recovered from Austria in consequence of the war. The Italians claim that these objects of virtu were systematically stolen by Austrians from Italy in the days when the Italians were too weak to protect themselves. First and foremost among them are nine magnificent tapestries of bible subjects. They are of Flemish workmanship.

These products of the first half of the Fifteenth century were hung in the ducal palace at Mantua. Emperor Francis Joseph ordered their transfer temporarily to the Industrial museum of Vienna and later they were removed to the imperial palace in the Austrian capital.

Speed of Jackrabbit.

Colorado Springs, Colo.—Jackrabbits fleeing from pursuit attain a speed of 50 miles an hour for the first mile, Colorado Springs motorcycle club officials reported at the conclusion of a cross-country chase in which the rabbit was run down at the end of five miles. In the second mile the rabbit made a forty-mile speed, and in the last three miles slowed down to 35 miles an hour. In their headlong dash over the prairie after the rabbit, the 11 motorcyclists in the party hurdled ditches and other obstructions at breakneck speed. When the rabbit fell exhausted he was picked up, and when he had rested was set free and scampered away.

Dickens Honored in London.

More than a dozen of the streets in London have been given the names of characters in the novels of Charles Dickens.

Red Always Disturbing Color.

Red has been called the king of colors. The bull is not the only creature that resents red; the elephant, the horse, the dog, the cock, are all alike in this respect. It is sufficient, for example, to cover the doors and skylights of a kennel with red material to cause incessant barking and commotion among the dogs confined therein. A spider and a wasp, confined in a glass case, are reported to have dwelt happily together until a red cloth was placed against the sides, when the insects tackled each other at once and a fight to the death ensued.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Ball Lightning.

Ball lightning, an example of which was seen in northwest London during a recent thunderstorm, is a well-attested phenomenon, occasionally seen during thunderstorms, most usually at sea. It always appears after an exceptionally vivid lightning flash, and is believed to be composed of oxygen and ozone thrown off from a negatively charged cloud. It has the appearance of a luminous sphere falling very slowly, or, when near the ground, moving horizontally, as though repelled by the earth, and finally disappearing as the result of an explosion of considerable violence.

The Dreaded Iron Virgin.

The iron virgin was an instrument of torture in use during the Middle ages. It was a hollow wooden figure, fashioned to represent a maiden of the Fifteenth century, and opened like a cupboard, revealing an interior studded with sharp iron spikes. After the victim had been forced within, the lid gradually closed upon him and brought his body in contact with the spikes, which pierced him through and through. There he lingered in dreadful agony, until death relieved him from his sufferings. Beneath the figure was a trapdoor, through which the dead body fell.

Doings at St. Hilaire High

By the Seniors

JUNIOR-SENIOR BANQUET

The Junior-Senior banquet was given Saturday evening in the Auditorium of the high school. The room was prettily decorated in the class colors, purple and white. One long table was set for twenty nine guests. It was decorated with Chrysanthimum nut baskets and place cards which carried out the Senior's class flower.

A delicious dinner was served by several members of the Sophomore class assisted by Medasmes Fricker, Gunstad and Beebe. The menu consisted of:

Cocktail
Roast Turkey and Gravey
Sauted sweet potatoes Mashed potatoes
Dressing Adirondack Salad
Pineapple & Cherry Ice Cream
Mints

Harvey Olsen, the Junior president, acted as toastmaster. He gave a short talk saying that the Junior class was sorry to see the Seniors leave. Margaret Patterson, the Senior president, answered that talk by thanking the Juniors for the banquet. Mr. Wesloh and Mr. Hatcher gave talks and their remarks were directed along the line of progress of the public schools and the necessity of higher education. Melvin Sherva, the only three year student, used the Senior's class motto as the basis for his talk, "Not failure, but low aim, is crime'. Anna Hallsmeck and Blanche Robson played piano solos.

This banquet was an important event for the Seniors and Juniors and will be a long remembered one in their high school career. —M. P.

Review and preparations are the "sure signs" that examinations are approaching.

The Seniors have been an exceptionally busy class of late, preparing for Commencement.

Last Friday during assembly period, Rev. Blaine Lambert gave a very interesting and instructive talk on "Going to College." Among other things, he pointed out that besides improving one's own self thru education, it will benefit the community in which you live and society in general. It is safe to say that there was not one high school student who did not benefit from his talk.

HAIL THE JUNIORS

The Juniors of St. Hilaire high are SOME class! The Seniors know it, —and the whole world knows it. If by chance anyone does not know it, then it's time they were waking up. Everything proves it. They are leaders; they are doers; they have the "snap up and get busy" spirit, and what is more, they are never found lacking in proper school spirit. Thy are "100 per cent perfect!

ANNUAL FIELD MEET

On Saturday, May 20th, at Greenbush, will be held the second annual Northern Minnesota Interscholastic Field Meet. St. Hilaire high will be there in full force, and without making efforts to deceive, we stand a good chance of taking our share of the events. The championship base ball game is perhaps the main event, on the field. Besides this there will be tennis, volley ball, jumping, running, and a number of other contests. In the evening a declamatory and oratorical contest will be held between representatives of all the schools.

It is urgently desired that as many from St. Hilaire attend as possible.

Proportionate Getting.

Once upon a time, according to Harry Emerson Fosdick, who is credited with the story, a minister and his little son walked across the fields on a summer afternoon, to a little church where the minister, a visitor, was to preach. At the door was a box for offerings, in which the visiting minister, as he arrived, placed 50 cents. The regular minister and the congregation arrived shortly after, and the service proceeded. After it, the minister of the church said to his visitor: "Now, I want you to have whatever offerings there are in the box. I don't know how much there may be." The box was opened; 50 cents was discovered, and gravely turned over to the visitor. Silence on the walk home across the fields, until the small son remarked: "Well, Dad, if you had put more in you would have got more out."

"BEST MAID" BREAD
The
Quality Bread

Did you ever stop to think about the price of Quality Bread in comparison with any other foods you buy?

"Quality Bread" better known in Red Lake Falls and most of the towns in the Valley as "Best Maid" Bread, a loaf of bread that is made of high grade patent flour, and of the purest, best ingredients money can buy. We use no substitute of any kind, and made by bakers that have made a lifelong study of the making of Quality Bread and naturally have become experts in their trade. We mention these facts for the reason that there have been bakeries and no doubt bakeries still exist, that are making and selling bread far below the food value of the "Quality Bread" and naturally they can sell it for a little less money, than we have to ask for our "Best Maid" Bread.

Quality Bread today is made in clean and sanitary Bakeries, where nothing is left undone in order to produce a loaf of bread to you, that is just a little better than one that was made yesterday. We ask you all in fairness to consider the difference in food value between "Best Maid" Bread and an ordinary loaf of bread, commonly known as "Bakery Bread" or "Bakers stuff" and we believe you'll agree with us, that "Quality Bread" is your best and most economical food today.

We want to present with as much clearness as possible the big value, nutritive as well as economical, in comparison with other standard foods, and our statements are backed by the Table of Food Values quoted from Goverment Bulletin No. 28. The shrewd buyer who gives this table an intelligent reading will find it an eye-opener. For instance, that takes two and one third pounds of chicken to yield as much nurishment as it would from one pound of "Quality Bread." If you act accordingly, you can easily "take o wailop" out of the high cost of living with Quality Bread.

COMMENCEMENT STARTS MAY 29

Eight Will Graduate From Local High School Next Thursday Evening.

With the Baccalaureate sermon to be delivered by Rev. C. M. Grimsrud at the Swedish Lutheran church next Sunday, Commencement Week will be ushered in for the St. Hilaire high school. On Wednesday there will be Class Day exercises. Plans are now being made for a picnic which will serve instead of exercises by individual classes. Thursday evening at the high school will be held the graduation exercises, and presentation of diplomas.

Mr. Joseph E. Kennedy of the University of North Dakota at Grand Forks, has been secured to deliver the principal address of the evening. Edyth C. Malmquist will deliver the Valedictory, and Margaret Patterson will give the Salutatory addresses. In addition there will be a short musical program.

The public is cordially invited to attend these exercises. The members of this year's graduating class are:

Margaret A. Patterson
Lillian F. Norman
Hazen A. Wallen
Edyth C. Malmquist
Blanche E. Robson
Sigurd Engh
Gladys A. Gigstad
Melvin Sherva.

Inspector Here

An inspector from the State Highway Department has been in this locality lately checking up on cars on which the 1922 license has not been paid. A few were found without the new tag and others bearing only a single plate of the new issue. They were given due warning in both cases.

Win From Oslo

The St. Hilaire ball team won their first game thus far this season when they met and defeated the Oslo aggregation here last Sunday. For the first five innings it was nobody's game, the score being nearly even. While the teams seemed to be quite evenly matched, the Oslo boys played in hard luck in a number of instances which is largely responsible for the outcome which was 14 to 5. The visitors were a fine bunch of fellows and they played a nice clean game thruout.

Red Lake Takes Game

At the opening of the valley league baseball season at Thief River Falls last Sunday, Red Lake Falls won from Thief River by a score of 9 to 6. The game was hotly contested, and was to a large extent, a pitchers' battle. Lusty stick work on part of the Red Lake lads at a stage of the game where it was needed, turned the trick.

Auction Sale

Ira Carpenter has bills out announcing a sale of household goods to take place at his residence in St. Hilaire next Monday. May 29.

Ed Aubol autoed Sunday to Crookston for a visit with his brother, Guy, who underwent an operation for stomach trouble at a Crookston hospital last week. The latter was getting along nicely when Mr. Aubol was with him.

Mrs. Riek Larson has been critically ill since Tuesday evening following childbirth. She was resting easier at this writing tho' still very ill and quite weak. Her many friends hope for a speedy recovery.

John Draeger who has charge of a bank at Badger for the State Banking Department, motored thru here Saturday enroute to Red Lake Falls to spend Sunday with friends.

Walter Soderberg and Hans Rod, Jr., left Sunday night over the Soo for Minneapolis from where they intend to ship out into Idaho for work in some of the big sawmills.

There are no high school or grade notes in this issue owing to the pupils being occupied with the pre-graduation activities.

Attorney G. Howard Smith of Thief River, candidate for county attorney, was here yesterday attending to business matters.

Election of officers of Iris Rebekah lodge will be held at the next meeting All members are requested to be present.

WOOL POOL AT 35 CENT MARK

Farmington Farmers' Agency Sells Entire 1921 Stock.

Another bright spot appeared in the wool market this week.

The national wool department of Farmington announced the sale of it's entire 1921 pool at prices based on 35 cents a pound for medium wools. A week before it announced offers of 30 cents a pound, but stated that it was insisting on at least 32 cents. The sale of the entire 1921 pool on the 35 cent bases followed.

The National Wool Department at Famington is one of three co-operative agencies endorsed by the Minnesota Wool Marketing Committee, which was organized by the Minnesota Farm Bureau federation at the request of a conference of wool producers, to handle Minnesota's 1922 clip on the statewide pooling plan. The marketing committee was organized by the Minnesota Farm Bureau federation at the request of a conference of wool producers early this year. It is unanimously recomended pooling of all Minnesota wool to take advantage of the rising market, strengthening of county wool growers' associations, and the organization of a state association in the autumn.

Political Announcement

(This notice to be paid for by N. J. Anderson at regular space rates.)

To the voters of Pennington county:

I am a candidate for re-election for Register of Deeds of Pennington county. During the years I have served the people of the county as Register of Deeds I have made many friends, but I am not asking support in the present campaign merely by virtue of this friendship. Rather I would have the voters consider my candidacy on a purely efficiency basis as the only proper method of electing officials to public office. In regards to fitness for the office of Register of Deeds, both as to honesty and capability, I prefer to rest my case with the people of Pennington county, whom I served in past years.

Yours respectfully,
N. J. ANDERSON

"BEST MAID" BREAD

The

Quality Bread

Did you ever stop to think about the price of Quality Bread in comparison with any other foods you buy?

"Quality Bread" better known in Red Lake Falls and most of the towns in the Valley as "Best Maid" Bread, a loaf of bread that is made of high grade patent flour, and of the purest, best ingredients money can buy. We use no substitute of any kind, and made by bakers that have made a lifelong study of the making of Quality Bread and naturally have become experts in their trade. We mention these facts for the reason that there have been bakeries and no doubt bakeries still exist, that are making and selling bread far below the food value of the "Quality Bread" and naturally they can sell it for a little less money, than we have to ask for our "Best Maid" Bread.

Quality Bread today is made in clean and sanitary Bakeries, where nothing is left undone in order to produce a loaf of bread to you, that is just a little better than one that was made yesterday. We ask you all in fairness to consider the difference in food value between "Best Maid" Bread and an ordinary loaf of bread, commonly known as "Bakery Bread" or "Bakers stuff" and we believe you'll agree with us, that "Quality Bread" is your best and most economical food today.

We want to present with as much clearness as possible the big value, nutritive as well as economical, in comparison with other standard foods, and our statements are backed by the Table of Food Values quoted from Goverment Bulletin No. 28. The shrewd buyer who gives this table an intelligent reading will find it an eye-opener. For instance. that takes two and one third pounds of chicken to yield as much nurishment as it would from one pound of "Quality Bread." If you act occordingly, you can easily "take o wallop" out of the high cost of living with Quality Bread.

LITTLE GRAY LADY

By MILDRED WHITE

Copyright, 1922, Western Newspaper Union.

She was a little gray lady. So Joe, the Westerner, thought of her. He was sure that he could not be in love with so quiet and colorless a person, and he decided, deliberately, to marry her for money.

The gray lady's real name was Barbara Waite, and her father, a ranch owner, had left her a lot of money.

Barbara studied her lessons at her mother's knee, and when the sweet old lady passed on to her reward, Barbara as patiently took up her household burdens.

Thus, Big Joe found her. He came recommended to take up the management of her lands.

The dresses that she wore from habit, because of their serviceableness, were usually of a soft gray, and her eyes, too, were gray, wistfully appealing as a child's. But the hair that had lain fair across Barbara's temples was now gray too—before its time.

She was not young, Joe concluded—nor yet old. Yes, he would marry her for her money. In a lifetime of labor and good fortune he might not accumulate such a sum.

She had never known a lover's attention, he decided, nor, in all probability, had an admirer. Wooing would be easy. Many sighing maidens had fallen before the unusual charm of the man's adoring dark eyes—which had not been adoring after all, but faithless. He would first show Barbara devotion, rendering her in her loneliness sympathy and helpful service; would make himself necessary by his kindness, then abruptly absent himself awaiting the assurance of her affection.

If Barbara Waite was lonely without him, if she watched and longed as others had done, he would return to her and ask his question.

The little gray lady gratefully accepted Big Joe's many deeds of kindness.

Often he felt Barbara Waite's eyes upon him, and when he looked back at her boldly, he could detect her shy tenderness.

So when Joe went away she missed him—missed him with an ache that her true heart had never known before, and when he came confidently back to her, Barbara married him.

If he was less kindly attentive as weeks passed, she told herself that his greater personal interest in the ranch was accountable for this lapse.

And then one day he came to her frankly, brutally almost, and told her that he was going away.

"I can't stand it any longer," said Joe. "I thought I could, but I can't. I—the truth is I married you for money, Barbara, and the money doesn't seem to bring me happiness. I've got to go away."

The little gray lady did not cry out; she did not reproach him. She just sat and studied for a time his flushed, daring face. "All right, Joe," she answered at last, her tone almost cheerful.

He stared at her, but she was in the pretty chintz-draped bedroom sorting out his clothes.

Mechanically she packed his black leather bag. "You can send for the rest of your things when you are located," she told him.

Joe took the bag. Some way he was disappointed.

"Good-by Joe," she said insinuatingly. "If money was all that you wanted when you married me, why you are still married to the money and I'll send it on until you find the work, or whatever it is that you need."

His bravado failed. He wanted to thank her, wanted to refuse her perplexing generosity, but found the door quickly locked and barred against him. Barbara had taken him at his word.

Back in the East he found a position that paid. He worked hard at it and made a success. When Barbara's checks came to him he saved them, returning them later in a neat pile. He met a young woman—the daughter of his employer, who supposed him to be free and who was gracious in her hospitality. But her gayety and flaunted attractions tired him, as did those pleasures which he had formerly enjoyed.

It was inexplicable; success in his grasp, the companionship of men whom he had coveted, and yet—dissatisfaction. Joe marveled on his need, when illness seized him—a long and serious illness, leaving him helplessly weak in a city hospital. Convalescence brought no promise of contentment, happiness he almost ceased to hope for, unless—
